QUYANA— The annual Alaska Federation of Natives Convention took place in the downtown Anchorage this year and the two nights of Quyana dance performances were sold out events. The Acilquq singers and dancers were among eight dance groups entertaining the crowds on Wednesday night at the Dena'ina Center.

AFN calls for better relationship with state government

By Diana Haecker

Mending and improving relationships stood front and center at this year's Alaska Federation of Natives Convention, held at the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage last week.

The theme of the 2011 AFN was "Strength in Unity." It takes unity in order to unleash the combined power of the Native community – that was the gist of many speeches. AFN president Julie Kitka reminded AFN delegates that this strength was shown during last year's Senatorial election, when the Native community threw their weight behind Lisa Murkowski in her historical and successful write-in campaign.

Kotzebue's Reggie Joule said, "We delivered the money for a political campaign and then we delivered the votes. And then there was a celebration of that strength that so many people have been waiting to see." It is that strength that was called upon over and over again during the convention.

The cry for unity was to rally delegates behind the idea to be serious about a push to better relationships among tribes, Native village corporations and Native regional corporations, as well as the State of Alaska and the various state departments, and the federal government.

Akiak tribal leader Mike Williams said that many things need mending. It has been 40 years since the Alaska Native Settlement Acts passed. In exchange for extinguishing future claims to land, Native Alaskans settled for 44.5 million acres of their ancestral lands and a payment of more than $900 million. ANCSA created Native corporations that were meant to provide economic opportunities for tribal members.

Williams said while there are great successes, there still are many issues that need resolution. What can be done to amend ANCSA to restore aboriginal hunting and fishing

Missing paperwork delays bid awards in offshore lease sale

By Laurie McNicholas

Gold miners Mike Benchoff and Scott Meisterheim were among high bidders for tracts in an offshore minerals lease sale held Sept. 28 in Nome by the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources. They bid on small, nearshore tracts in an outcry auction.

However, a qualifying statement required for all bidders in the sale is not on file for Benchoff and Meisterheim, according to Kerwin Krause, mineral property manager for DNR's Division of Mining, Land and Water. Krause said he notified the miners by phone on Sept. 30 that their qualifying statements were missing and then searched all sale documents three times in a futile effort to find them.

A few other bidders placed their names on a qualifying statement form, but did not check the boxes verifying they are United States citizens and 18 years of age or sign the document, Krause noted. He said the DNR has delayed publishing a list of the three highest bidders for each tract offered in the lease sale while

Council to address high energy costs

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Nome Common Council took initial action on five budget revision items Monday, unanimously passing them into second reading and final passage at the next regular meeting Nov. 14. These spending plans deal with revenue and expenditure adjustments to the 2011 general fund budget, construction capital projects, special revenue budget, capital projects fund budget and the Port of Nome fund budget. Copies of all are available at Nome City Hall.

In other business the Council approved a bid award to Arctic Slope Regional Corp. Builders, Inc. for a high mast lighting project at Port of Nome. Bid opening Oct. 7 showed a range of $897,000 (ASRC) to $1,085,105 from Hot Wire Electric. Other bids were from Puffin Electric, $898,200; Alaska Mechanical, $997,750; and Pro-West Contractors, $1,035,000. The engineers estimated the cost at $833,135 a year

Dear Nancy:
Recently Nome had the privilege of having the Dept of Natural Resources, (Alaska) permitting folks come to our town. The intended purpose was to get public opinion on how to improve and speed up permitting processes. There should have been time for everyone to come forward with their compliment or complaint. Unfortunately, the miner's code was not honored (whereby one works hard and talks little), and the meeting was dominated by a few people repeating the same complaints. We would like to take this opportunity now to voice our opinion, as we didn't get an opportunity at the public meeting without interrupting repeated dialogue.
The offshore lease sale is owned and was conducted by the State of Alaska under State of Alaska Rules and Regulations. Perhaps reading the Alaska Statutes and Alaska Administrative Code could enlighten some as to the rules and regulations about bidding on any State bid. It is the bidder's responsibility to request a bid packet, read, study and understand the bid packet and process. Then perform your paperwork according to the bid packet and become successful in the bidding process. No portion of the above can be legally deviated from. It is not the State's duty to comply for the bidder's irresponsibility. It is the bidder's responsibility. Millions and millions of dollars of bids have been disqualified over the years within the State of Alaska and lost due to a small bid error. Unfortunate but true, and a lesson we ourselves have learned the hard way in the past.
We and many others received our bid packet, studied the bid packet, prepared our paperwork and turned in our required documents to enter the bid process. We did not find the bid process chaotic, but normal. We studied hard, prepared ourselves the best we could and systematically entered the bid process. If it was the first time for someone to be in a competitive bid process and an outcry auction, and they were not prepared for the process, it might have seemed chaotic to them, but it was in fact, the normal process.
We attended this permitting meeting to be helpful and learn what we could about streamlining the permitting process. We have done many prospecting and mining permits through the years, and they are complicated. We applaud Governor Parnell in working with the participants in mining to streamline this large process. Prospecting and mining permits are a lot of work, but necessary for the privilege of mining in Alaska.
After hearing the accusations against the current DNR personnel - who work in the mining division, it has become apparent that there are

Corporate Influence

Corporations are individuals. They may not have a heart or a soul and they can't vote, but they must be treated as individuals when it comes to paying taxes. How much leniency should the State of Alaska give to big multinational corporations to make it easier for them to do business in Alaska? Nomeites will remember the "Roads to Resources" program that built a brand new highway across the tundra right up to the front door of NovaGold's Rock Creek Mine. The state even paid the gold company to supply the gravel for their new road. Would they have done the same for a local corporation or individual who wanted to build a hotel along the banks of Glacier Creek?
Corporations are to be treated as individuals, but it seems the state frequently confuses them for royalty. Maybe this is because they are expected to pay royalty payments for use of state land. Corporations are not above the law and the state need not turn a blind eye to potential problems. In Nome NovaGold has several tons of explosive grade ammonium nitrate stored unsecured only 1/2 mile from our high school. NovaGold claims it is nothing but fertilizer. Yep! It's fertilizer. Just a little bit of this same kind of fertilizer claimed a lot of lives when the Murra Building was blown up in Oklahoma City a few years back. We have too many instances of favoritism and special consideration for big multinational corporations at the expense of public safety.
We need to realize that the special interests of big corporations are not what is best for Alaskans. We should not be too anxious to give away our resources. We should not give special tax breaks to big names. Sure, we always hear the jobs mantra. We remember hearing it in Nome, but look what it brought us. Families were afraid to let their daughters walk down Front Street. It's not about jobs, it's about well-financed political demands. Readers can contact their state senators and representatives to urge their attention to this problem.

Native and environmental groups challenge EPA drilling permits

The Environmental Protection Agency issued the final Clean Air Permit to Shell's exploration vessel Kulluk. The Kulluk and its own fleet of support vessels are to start exploration drilling in the Beaufort Sea next year. Permits allow the drillship and its support fleet to emit 30 tons of particulate matter, 240 tons of nitrogen oxides and 80,000 tons of carbon dioxide. A coalition of the Native Village of Point Hope and several environmental groups appealed EPA's decision to issue a different Clean Air permit for Shell's drillship Discoverer. The ship is to start exploratory drilling in the Beaufort and Chukchi Seas in June 2012.

Earthjustice lawyers say that the Arctic is already under huge stress from climate change, and that Shell's industrial activities would significantly increase global warming pollution in this critical region, which is warming twice as fast as the rest of the world. The appeal was filed before the Environmental Appeals Board by the Center for Biological Diversity, Native Village of Point Hope, Resisting Environmental Destruction on Indigenous Lands, Alaska Wilderness League, Natural Resources Defense Council, Northern Alaska Environmental Center, Ocean Conservancy, Oceana, Pacific Environment, the Sierra Club and the Wilderness Society. The organizations are being represented by Earthjustice.

USDA funds water improvements in Diomede, energy improvements in Stebbins

Little Diomede will see some improvement in their water situation as they received grants for the construction of a new 340,000-gallon water storage tank and 500 feet of water distribution mains. The additional storage capacity of the new tank would ensure that the community has a year-round safe water source. The current tank is filled for winter use, but the water supply typically runs out around March. The washeteria is then closed and residents are required to melt snow and ice for drinking water. All households on Diomede use privies and honeybuckets. Unalakleet was among a few villages that received construction and planning funds for water and wastewater improvements. Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium received $12.3 million in grants for water and sewer systems including Golovin and Kiana.

The money comes from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Rural Development which awarded funds to project in the 1980s.

During last months' elections, Talkeetna residents voted on an advisory ballot, opposing the construction of the Susitna-Watana dam by a vote of 109 to 19. According to community radio KTNA, a local group spearheading opposition to the dam, the Coalition for Susitna Dam Alternatives, believe that, with education, others will see that the dam is too big, too expensive, and unnecessary given other more viable alternatives. They are concerned about potentially devastating impacts on salmon and other wildlife.

the Rural Alaska Village Grant program funding and a grant to the Denali Commission for Norton Sound projects. The $5.7 million award to the Denali Commission in Alaska will fund projects to upgrade the Stebbins/St. Michael Rural Power System and replace a generator for the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative, Inc.

Susitna Dam gets project manager

The plan to create a multi-billion dollar, mega-hydroelectric power plant by damming the Susitna River in South Central Alaska is moving forward as the Alaska Energy Authority hired a project manager, Wayne Dyok. Dyok is slated to begin work on Nov. 1. Dyok has more than 35 years of U.S. and international experience in Federal Energy Regulatory Commission licensing, engineering design, environmental studies and energy planning on hydroelectric projects. He has managed major hydroelectric licensing projects for the California Department of Water Resources, Seattle City Light and Dominion Generation. Dyok has a master's degree in civil engineering and is a licensed civil engineer in Alaska.

Dyok also served as chief hydraulic engineer and assistant manager on the Susitna hydroelectric

Yukon leader receives 2011 Presidential Citizens Medal

The President of the United States Barack Obama awarded 13 Americans with the highest civilian award, the Citizens Medal, and among them was Yukon leader Clarence Lee Alexander. The president in his speech said that Alexander has helped lead the charge in protecting the Yukon River Watershed. In addition to working to save the waterways, he has been instrumental in saving lives through the Council of Athabaskan Tribal Governments, which provides health care to some of the most remote villages in North America. The president said that Alexander exemplifies the difference one person can make in preserving natural resources and cherished traditions for the next generation of Americans.

• Nome Common Council to address high energy costs

ago. The bulk of the money for the project, $666,508, came from the Denali Commission, plus a port match of 20 percent—$166,627, and $63,865 for the difference between the estimate and the bid coming from the port's FY 2013 maintenance and operation fund.

High mast lighting uses mounts of 100 feet or more to light large areas, which port boss Joy Baker said was needed for safety and opportunity for vessel landing and unloading. When Councilman Stan Andersen asked what the port had been using up to now, Baker responded that operation required two to three lower lights for barge loading and unloading; the new lights are high efficiency lights that would be on only as needed. Andersen also pointed out that there was only $1,200 difference in the bid from ASRC Builders and the next bid from Puffin Electric and wanted to know if ASRC had been found capable and had equipment in town. Josie Bahnke, city manager, responded that ASRC would be using three subcontractors for the job: STG, Inc., for dirt work, NJUS for electrical work and PK Electrical as electrical administrators. The project engineers, PND Engineers, reviewed the bids before the award. Knodel abstained from the approving vote, as her son, an electrician, would be working on the job, she said.

Knodel asked that Mayor Denise Michels appoint Jim West, Jr. to the Port Commission. Andersen balked, asking that the issue be taken up in executive session. Michels pointed out that a person being discussed in executive session had an option to be present. West was not present at the Council meeting. The Council approved West's reappointment to his expired seat with a vote of 5-1. Knodel commented that West had done a good job, was a port user and knew a lot about the operations.

Under water and lights business, the Council received an update on a wind turbine project poised for Banner Ridge from NJUS Manager John K. Handeland, but attempted to put the brakes to the project in favor of taking a broad look at big-picture, long term energy options to ease the high costs keeping Nome residents and businesses under siege.

NJUS has applied for funding for one, and now two, 900 kw turbines to join Banner Wind Farm's 18 smaller machines. Handeland met with the state Alaska Energy Authority, a panel that has approved the conceptual design, approving its progress to the next phase of final design and permitting. The energy produced from the turbine project would potentially save half a million gallons of diesel fuel and allow a re-integration of two smaller generators to relieve wear and tear on the system's Wartsila 5.2 megawatt generators. NJUS is looking into funding for putting up two 900-kilowatt generators to use one pass of the large crane that has to be brought from Kotzebue.

Whoa, said Knodel. Whoa, said Andersen. They felt the town as a whole needed to sit down and talk about energy solutions and also have a joint work session with NJUS to look at the future. The diesel fuel oil meter hit $6 a gallon about a week ago, surpassing high oil prices in 2008.

"We need to have more expertise before we start shelling out our own money," Andersen said. State and federal funding is in the works, Handeland said, with NJUS working on obtaining a fraction as a local match. The turbines could be spinning in summer of 2013, with other energy options taking as long as 10 years to develop, Handeland said.

"We hope effort by Kawerak to coordinate regional energy plans will flush out options, Bahnke, city manager, added.

Studies lie in file drawers concerning coal, natural gas and hydroelectric energy sources. Realizing that people are leaving and business is suffering from high energy costs, the Council wants to dig into storage cabinets to revisit studies and to find energy solutions.

Knodel wants the drill records from gas exploration in Norton Sound from the state now that the leases have been turned back and the information is in the public record.

Concerning the fluoride—Handeland reported that NJUS is working with Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium to take them up on an offer to provide the fluoride chemical, the equipment and the training to restart fluoridation of Nome's drinking water supply. The Council did not act on a resolution from the NJUS board asking the Council to rescind the fluoridation requirement. An equipment failure stopped the fluoridation some months ago. The equipment is being replaced and ANTHC has agreed to replace test-state officials consider options for resolving qualifying statement issues.

Benchoff was the high bidder on 10 tracts and Meisterheim bid highest for two tracts offered at the outcry auction, according to Krause. He said high bidders paid a deposit of 88 cents per acre for each tract and were given receipts for the deposits. Leases larger than 160 acres were sold through sealed bidding.

Krauss described preparations on the day of the lease sale at Old St. Joe's Hall. He said signs posted on the entry door and on a table inside the building told prospective bidders to qualify by signing in on a register and filling out a qualification statement. The same information was included in a pre-sale notice, he added. He said it is a prerequisite to have a bidder's qualification statement on file even if the bidder is well-known.

Officials who assisted the lease sale in addition to Krause were Bill Cole, mineral property manager, Division of Mining, Land and Water; Allen Eddy of DNR's Division of Oil and Gas; and Leslie Tose, small mines coordinator with the Army Corps of Engineers, who is in charge of permitting the operations in deeper water.

Krause said Eddy came along to gain experience in the lease auction process and was instructed not to give numbers to bidders unless they filled out paperwork. (Bidders in the outcry auction held up number signs to make their bids.) Krause said Eddy has acknowledged he probably told several persons who asked whether they needed to fill out the form if they have mining permits that he wouldn't think so. Jim All-eva, one of two auctioneers from a private firm hired by DNR helped at a table, Krause added.

The Oct. 6 edition of the Nugget reported that bidding at the auction began an hour late because the plane carrying DNR officials was delayed. The story also noted that offshore gold leases aren't offered anywhere else in Alaska, and DNR's previous gold lease sale was held in 1999.

A decision whether to allow Benchoff and Meisterheim to file qualifying statements or to disqualify them in the absence of the required documents is due soon, Krause added.

Miners air complaints

Benchoff and Meisterheim presented verbal complaints about the qualifying statements issue to Joe Balash, deputy commission of DNR, and Brent Goodrum, director of the Division of Mining, Land and Water at public forum held by DNR Oct. 20 in Nome. DNR also hosted a forum in seven other Alaska communities in the past month to gather input on streamlining permitting processes at state resource agencies.

Both Benchoff and Meisterheim questioned why they had received a bidding number if they were not qualified to bid. "The procedures changed three times, and now it's the responsibility of the miners," said Meisterheim. Benchoff said some lease sale participants said they were told they were qualified to bid if they have a mining permit.

"[Some] are saying I drove up the price and was in collusion with the state," Benchoff said. "I had an influence on the auction by being able to bid. It's a Pandora's Box."

Sandra Madearis said she wants to underline that the paperwork process was very casual for the gravity of the situation. "I said, 'What do I do, do I fill it out?' I have a riff on over 18." Madearis said she was told, "At some point you've got to fill this out," so she did.

John Manz said he bid second highest on a tract for which Benchoff made the top bid and would benefit if Benchoff is dropped, but Benchoff had a bid number and paid a deposit fee, and that's fair enough. "The bottom line was the money taken from each individual," Manz added. "The fees were minimal, but they paid the fees in good faith...."

Dredge regs don't work

Manz said regulations specifying an 8-inch diameter hose and a maximum 36 horsepower motor for dredges in a recreational mining area are not feasible. "Most people now are not following the regulation," he added.

Manz explained that it's hard to find an application to mount on a 4-by-5-inch pump that pumps 1,500 gallons of water per minute and have it work properly. He said motors with more than 36 horsepower level off at 32 horsepower because too much suction would pull rocks into the nozzle.

"We want gold, not to suck our way to China," stated miner Scott Travis. "Why does DNR even do horsepower?" Travis said he uses a Buick motor. "My V6 uses less gas; 30 gallons a week, while others with V8s burn 100 gallons a week...."

"Are there any miners actually working at DNR?" asked Travis.

Brent Goodrum said the division needs to get a workable answer back to the miners. Other state officials at the forum were Kirsten Ryan, director, Division of Environmental Health, Dept. of Environmental Conservation; and Bruce Phelps and Brandon McCutcheon, Resource Assessment and Development Section, Division of Mining, Land and Water.

Nome attendance low

DNR's Nome forum drew a dozen members of the public, most of whom participated in the Sept. 28 offshore lease sale. The meeting was linked by audio conference to the Kotzebue Legislative Information Office, but no one provided input from that site.

Meisterheim said a few people heard about the meeting by word of mouth in Nome. "The other 100 miners are not here and should be," he added.

The public can submit ideas for streamlining permitting online at http://dnr.alaska.gov/commis/Priorities/Permitting_Reform.html ing equipment next. Handeland has told ANTHC he wants the fluoride monitoring system integrated into NJUS computer industrial control system.

The Council approved an ordinance accepting a right-of-way easement on Nathan's Loop at Panorama Subdivision for maintenance along with ownership of two lots for snow storage.

Finally, Bahnke assured the Council that its involvement in a state building to be built by Sitnasuak Native Corp. on their land was following an orderly time line drawn up by Sitnasuak CEO Dave Hoffman and Mark Pfeffer of Pfeffer Development. At this stage of the game, according to the task list, the City and Sitnasuak have confirmed their commitment to the project and notified the state Dept. of Administration of the public to private partnership having secured Sitnasuak's site on Front Street and clarified that the financing and risk will be assumed by Sitnasuak, keeping the City in the clear. Sitnasuak will borrow the money, build the building, and then sell it to the City. According to conversation among the Council and City administration, the City will buy it only on paper, without funding, and sell it to the State of Alaska on the same day. In this way, the deal will be government to government.

Anderson still questioned whether the transaction would go against state procurement laws that require a competitive bid.

"I still don't see how that's legal," he said.

A next task on the project will be to nail down the size of the building and the cost, then forward these to the Dept. of Administration, followed by a construction phase, according to Bahnke.

rights? What is done to pass shares on to those born after Dec. 18, 1971? "As tribes we consider these sections to be a throwback to the days of termination when the only good Indian was one who had been made to prematurely join his ancestors," Williams said. "Out of necessity we have been developing and growing our ANCSA corporations for the last 40 years — we now must take the time to strengthen our tribes and their capacity as governments. We need both."

Williams said unity is needed to secure and protect Native ancestral lands, recover hunting and fishing rights and restore the rights of the so-called after-borns to have a stake in their corporations.

Musher and 2011 Iditarod champion John Baker of Kotzebue gave the keynote address on the opening day of AFN. Baker evoked the metaphor of traveling by dog team to bring about the message of what strength in unity means. "It was a 16-year journey to winning the Iditarod," Baker said. "You can learn a lot from a dog team."

Baker said when he first flew over the Iditarod sled dog trail, he wanted to run the race. After his first completion of the race he changed his dream: "I wanted to win this race," Baker said. "But what are the odds that one of the poorest mushers from Kotzebue is going to win the toughest race in the world?"

One of the ingredients of his success, he said, is to never give up on a dream. His role model, he pointed out, is his mother Marge Baker, who in the face of adversity never complained and always persevered. Baker's father died in an airplane accident and while Marge Baker raised seven children, she also owned and operated her own airplane taxi company. Baker said that he learned real courage from her and then cast the net of his speech further, to include what courage, strength and unity means in the larger context of Alaska's past, present and future.

Baker said that Alaska Native Corporations today are the backbone of Alaska's economy. "What makes our corporations so unique is that we are sharing," Baker said. "Our corporations are not victims, we are Alaska's economy. That's really something to be proud of," Baker said. He also reminded the convention that political unity sends a powerful message. "We faced the odds that a person would go to Washington who didn't represent us," Baker said. "But we came together and prevented a disaster."

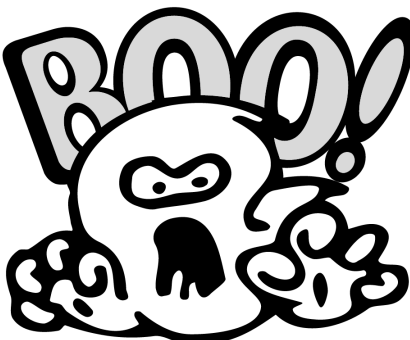

Alluding to differing opinions on resource development, Baker said that even though they may not agree on how much mining and drilling is done in the arctic, they should make sure that their voices are heard.

Baker appealed to the leadership qualities that are in each individual and finished his speech with an episode from the trail. "In a particularly cold year, by the time we got to Unalakleet, I was spent and the dogs were spent," Baker said. Instead of giving in to frustration and tiredness, and resisting temptation to just give up, Baker said a wonderful thing happened. "When it was time to go, I gave the command to go [smacks his lips to mimic the sound of his command] and very little happened. But then I did it again, and Velvet [his lead dog] stood up. Then the dog next to her stood up. And pretty soon the whole team was up and we were off and running again, heading for Shaktoolik. Sometimes all it takes, is the willingness to stand up," Baker said.

His speech was met with a standing ovation and shouts of "Arigaa".

An honest debate

Tara Sweeney, representing the Arctic Slope, put the cards on the table during her speech regarding changes in the AFN. The country as a whole and the Native community in particular are faced with federal spending cuts never seen before.

This creates an unknown future in terms of funding and although the federal government has by treaty a trust commitment to Native Americans, budget cuts are a given in the new reality of budget deficits in the trillions and a House of Representatives controlled by Tea Party members whose sole mission is to cut the budget at all costs.

Alaska has wealth in its resources and substantial savings in state coffers, but as the oil that is pumped through the trans-Alaska pipeline is declining, Sweeney said, more resource development is needed to assure the survival of many current programs. As a result, a unified Native voice is needed to further the cause of self-determination and for continued funding of necessary programs. And not only does this mean a unified Alaska Native voice is needed, but it also means that mending of the relationship between Native Alaskans and the state government is in order.

Time and again, fiery speeches called for the state to recognize the federally recognized tribes. Roy Huhndorf, CIRI board member, said that the biggest impediment for a more fruitful dialogue between the Native community and the state is that the state does not recognize tribal governing rights.

Natasha Singh, general counsel for the Tanana Chiefs Conference, echoed the feeling and said that any deeper engagement would have to start with the state's recognition of tribes and ANCSA corporations. "Recognition is the first step, then we could develop a consultation policy and figure out a formal way how to speak to state entities," Singh said.

DNR Commissioner Dan Sullivan maintained that the areas of common interest are far greater than the areas of disagreement and differences. "We want to build on that, we are committed to that partnership," Sullivan said. However, no commissioner commented on the request for formal recognition.

Sullivan, who was commissioner for the department of Law prior to his DNR appointment, said that while a lot of the discussions highlight rifts between the state and the tribes, Native and non-Natives, there is common ground. "We are all Alaskans and a lot of the problems that we are discussing are affecting all of us," he said.

KEYNOTE SPEAKER— John "Quniaq" Baker gave the keynote address to kick off the AFN convention on Thursday, Oct. 20. Baker won the 2011 Iditarod Sled Dog Race and was repeatedly referred to as the first Native musher to win the race. Baker corrected the notion in his speech, acknowledging prior Native Iditarod champions Carl Huntington, Emmit Peters and Jerry Riley as well as mentioning second place winner Herbie "The Shishmaref Cannonball" Nayokpuk.

ROLE MODEL— Marge Baker, mother of John Baker, was greeted with thundering applause during John Baker's keynote speech. The 2011 Iditarod champion said that his mother is his hero and an example of living life with courage, determination and perseverance.

Education commissioner Mike Hanley also expressed his willingness to work together. "We import 70 percent of our teachers," Hanley said. "They don't even understand Anchorage, and how can they be effective teachers when they don't understand the culture in rural Alaska? For the sake of Alaska, we need to raise our own workforce to live here, work here and thrive here," Hanley said.

Commissioner of Health and Social Services William Streur also reaffirmed that both the state and the tribal health organizations would fail if they would not cooperate and tackle the issues together.

Willie Hensley, one of the leaders pushing for the 1971 Native Claims Settlement Act, was not as optimistic. He half-joked that he isn't ready for a slow dance with Commissioner Sullivan yet, but said that concerns are deeply rooted because Alaska Natives didn't really have a say in the creation of the state of Alaska. "It's better to have a state in which we are citizens than have Alaska run from Washington D.C.," Hensley said. He added that one small part of Alaska has contributed much to the wealth of the state, but that recognition has yet to come from state entities. "It's about time for the state to help us out with some of the issues that are facing us," Hensley said.

During a following panel discussion, Georgianna Lincoln of Fairbanks said that Native people need to be more assertive in making their voices heard. "We need to become rabble rousers and we have to speak up," she said.

In the context of a question that asked how to encourage more Native people in state and community leadership roles, she went so far as to say, "We need to take their [commissioners] job, get on the assembly, be the mayor, that's how."

Panel discussions were a new, added feature to the AFN convention. Instead of listening to reports all day, delegates were treated to panel discussions in an interactive, talk show format with comfy armchairs and a moderator. This format allowed for discussions between panel members and the audience through written, submitted questions. An electronic device was handed out to delegates and used to take opinion polls from the audience to questions posed.

Almost an entire day was dedicated to panel discussions with the theme on how to improve the Native relationship with the state. Top Department heads including the commissioners of Natural Resources, Education, Health and Human Services, Fish and Game, Commerce and Economic Development and Public Safety as well as Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell and the governor's senior rural affairs advisor John Moller were present, sitting in the front rows to listen to the panel discussions.

Outgoing North Slope Mayor Edward Itta said that the Native community needs to spread more awareness of the critical role that Native ANCSA corporations are playing for the economic wellbeing and health of the State of Alaska. "Our corporations are economic powerhouses but somehow that does not translate into recognition," Itta said.

He added that rural Native

Alaskans keep on having to explain their subsistence lifestyle to urban Alaskans. “There is a world of difference of living in rural Alaska and living in the urban areas. Our challenge is that we need to make them understand and go further and empathize with our lifestyle and then act,” Itta said.

This was exemplified when the Alaska Legislature failed to extend the Alaska Coastal Zone Management program, a federal program that allowed local input in resource development affecting coastal areas. AFN delegates passed a resolution that called for the re-establishment of the ACMP “to allow meaningful participation by local coastal districts.”

The panel discussions also highlighted perennial topics including making education relevant to rural students, combating outrageously high incidents of domestic violence --and sexual abuse, alcohol abuse and the lack of sobriety centers in rural areas.

Changes to AFN

Tara Sweeney, chair of the AFN leadership committee, gave a report that dealt with reforming the governance structure of AFN. The leadership committee came up with several measures to restructure the organization, including increasing the size of the board from 37 to 49 members by adding a tribal or at-large member from each region.

The committee also recommended the creation of Governance Council to oversee the operations of AFN and to afford full voting rights to tribes and village corporations as so-called class A members. Currently, only regional corporations, regional non-profits and villages have full voting rights that also come with a yet-to-be determined amount of dues.

According to Sweeney’s committee report, only class A members in good standing are “eligible to participate at appropriate levels within the AFN organization.” The committee recommended installing term limits for co-chairs at a maximum of four terms and to come up with a mechanism to adequately fund AFN.

Sweeney ended her report saying that unity doesn’t necessarily mean always agreeing on all issues. “Instead, unity should be defined by what we have all in common and what we all are striving for as a Native people: self-determination,” she said.

Sweeney, from the Arctic Slope region, also issued a challenge to the tribes. “We must not be held hostage to the remnants of the BIA school teachers who wrote many of our IRA or Tribal council organic documents,” she said. “The BIA continues its chokehold on our people by promoting an agenda that convinces us that we are not sovereign or have no right to self-determination unless we are recipients of federal money or grants.”

She then addressed the corporate entities and said that the creation of ANCSA corporations resulted not only in great successes, but also in a division between corporations and tribal entities. “We must reach across the aisle and seek to understand the needs of our tribal organizations and help lift them up and continue to build capacity in our communities,” she said.

Northern Waters Task Force hears public testimony during AFN

By Diana Haecker

The Northern Waters Task Force took advantage of the largest gathering of Alaska Natives in the state during AFN week and held a public hearing in the Dena'ina Center in Anchorage last Wednesday. The meeting didn't draw a large crowd, but about 30 people in the audience shared their concerns with the task force.

Task force chair Reggie Joule (D-Kotzebue) said that public hearings were held all around the state and in early 2012, the task force will put forth recommendations to the Alaska State Legislature and then cease to exist, if there is no recommendation to extend it in some form or another.

No departments or federal testimony was invited and the floor was open to the public. Michael Brubaker with the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium presented a compilation of last year's disasters that can be linked to climate change. "All across Alaska, we experience climate change and its impacts.

"Some of these impacts affect health, cause injuries or death, and are affecting food security and food safety as well as water safety and sanitation infrastructure," Brubaker said. And then he rattled off the disasters: ice storm in Savoonga, back-to-back blizzards in northwestern Alaska, unusual windstorms in southcentral, storm surges in the north, avalanches in southern Alaska.

The month of May was the driest May on record, followed by an early outbreak of wildfires.

Unusual fungus turned the ocean orange in Kivalina, shell fish poisonings spiked in the south and sick ring seals show up on the North Slope with a mysterious skin disease. "The cause of these events is unknown, but it is important that we prevent harm from these events to communities," Brubaker said.

Dorothy Childers with the Bering Sea Elders Advisory Group presented a mapping project of 17 communities from the Kuskokwim Bay to the Bering Strait to show the combination of cultural and ecological significance of subsistence.

The project was prompted by the concern about changes in fisheries.

Childers presented the report and urged the task force to keep in mind that the underlying message of the report is that subsistence and the desire to continue their way of life is the Elders' primary concern.

A subsistence user from Merko-ryuk testified to what he encounters. He said last November, he found a dead, mature ringed seal and sent it in to Fish and Wildlife for an autopsy. Turned out, the seal died of pneumonia.

On another occasion, he found a dead walrus with lots of cavities instead of teeth and tusks. This was also sent in for an autopsy. He said the first halibut he caught this season was terribly deformed with a long jaw, small head and horn growing out of his belly.

Reggie Joule closed the hearing saying that there is much science out there. "But we need to hear those who chose to live along the coast of the Bering Sea, not just those who want to take advantage of the situation," Joule said.

The last NWTF meetings are scheduled to take place in Barrow and Wainwright before the task force compiles its findings for a report to the Legislature.

DISEASE OUTBREAK - SEALS

October 2011 Update

Over 100 sick or dead pinnipeds with diseased patches of skin have been discovered in the Arctic in recent months. The cause is unknown but is being studied. During July near Barrow, ringed seals were reported with blisters on flippers and face as well as hair loss. This condition is now being reported in the Bering Strait / Norton Sound region.

PLEASE REPORT UNUSUAL SEALS!

If you find an unusual seal in the Bering Strait region, contact:

- Eskimo Walrus Commission: 1-877-277-4392 (Nome)
- Gay Sheffield: 1-800-478-2202 (UAF-Marine Advisory Program, Nome)
- NMFS 1-877-925-7773 (Marine Mammal Stranding Network – Juneau)

PUBLIC HEALTH / SAFE HANDLING

It is generally recommended to not eat seals or walruses that look sick.

Until we know more, if you harvest or find a sick seal you should:

- Wear gloves
- Wash your hands
- Cook meat before eating it
- Wash your equipment. Rinse it with a bleach solution.

ACMP sees efforts for its revival

A ballot initiative aimed to revive the Alaska Coastal Management Program has garnered the support of the Alaska Federation of Natives, which issued a resolution to endorse the effort. The initiative is sponsored by the Alaska Sea Party, a group of municipal officials including City and Borough of Juneau Mayor Bruce Botelho, Kodiak Island Borough Mayor Jerome Selby and Kenai Peninsula Borough assemblyman Mako Haggerty. Outgoing North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta voiced support for the initiative at the annual AFN convention and said that the program gave the locals a voice in big resource development projects which mostly are in rural Alaska.

"If we work together early in the process, the chances of a timely and successful start are much better than if local people are just left out in the cold. Coastal management never stopped a project in the past. It just gave communities a stake in the project," Itta said.

After operating successfully for 34 years, Alaska's Coastal Zone Management Program died when the Alaska Legislature failed in 2011 to renew it during both the regular session and two special sessions called in part to restore the program. Without a program in place, federal agencies need not consult state or local officials on questions of coastal development. If the petition is signed by some 26,000 Alaska voters, and if the Alaska Legislature fails to enact substantially similar legislation during the 2012 regular session, "An Act establishing the Alaska Coastal Management Program" will appear on either the August 2012 primary or the November 2012 Alaska general election ballot. If voters approve the measure, the Act will create a coastal management program to replace the one dismantled in 2011.

Important questions for end-of-life care

By Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

Many important decisions must be made when a person reaches the end of life. Though modern medicine has given us the ability to treat serious disease and in many ways prolong meaningful life, modern technology sometimes gets in the way of a meaningful death. Machines can now breathe for us, keep our heart beating, and feed us long after the psyche (ancient Greek word for soul) has departed.

Most health care professionals want to honor a person's wishes regarding how he or she wants to be treated in the final days of life. But even well meaning providers and nurses cannot know what a person wishes when it comes to the many decisions regarding medication, nutrition, hydration, testing, and treatment that must be made during the closing hours of life.

In most medical encounters, people are able to speak for themselves and make decisions regarding their own health care. At the end of life, however, many people are unable to communicate with their providers, due to illness, dementia, or lack of consciousness. This is why most states, including Alaska, allow patients to provide guidance ahead of time regarding how they wish to be treated if unable to speak for themselves.

An "Advance Health Care Directive," otherwise known as a "Living Will," provides the health care community with important information regarding a person's wishes at the end of life.

A living will answers six important questions:

1. How long do you wish to prolong your life? If you are unconscious with no hope for recovery, or have a terminal illness that will end your life in a short amount of time, do you want your life prolonged by artificial means, like a respirator or pacemaker?

2. Do you wish to be fed artificially? If you develop a terminal illness or advanced dementia and are unable to feed yourself or refuse the assistance of others to feed you, do you want to be fed artificially by a feeding tube placed in the stomach or by a permanent intravenous line?

3. Are you an organ donor? When you die, do you wish to have your organs or tissues donated to living persons in need of transplant? Do you wish to donate your body for education or research purposes?

4. What if you are pregnant? If you become unconscious with a life-threatening illness or injury while pregnant, what are your wishes regarding artificial life support until the baby can survive outside the womb?

5. Who is your primary physician? At the end of life there may be many doctors, surgeons, and specialists involved in your treatment. Do you have a physician who knows you and your wishes that can serve as a contact for the many providers involved your care?

6. Who do you want to speak for you? If you are unconscious or otherwise are unable to speak for yourself, who would best be able to let doctors and other health professionals know what you would say or want done? In Alaska you may pick up to three people to serve as your agent(s) for making health care decisions.

An official Advance Health Care Directive form can be downloaded from the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services web page: <http://www.hss.state.ak.us>.

Though end-of-life care may be an uncomfortable topic, when it comes to receiving the best care at the close of life, your wishes matter. There may come a time when you cannot speak for yourself. If this happens, one of the best gifts you can leave your family, loved ones, and healthcare providers is clear direction regarding your wishes and who should speak for you if you lose the ability to speak for yourself.

Saying it Sincerely

"Hungry for More!"

By Pastor Mike Christian – River of Life Assembly of God
A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

"Then Moses said, 'I beseech thee, show me thy glory.'"

Moses is one man who had seen it all. Raised in the court of the King of Egypt, he had seen the pomp and glory of the Pharaoh. Then fleeing to Midian, he experienced the rural life of a shepherd for 40 years. After this, God appeared to Moses, calling him to be the deliverer of the Jews, bringing them out of the bondage of Egyptian slavery.

Moses saw the mighty hand of God work nine great miracles in Egypt so that it humbled the pride of Pharaoh. He also saw God open the Red Sea and provide miracle "manna," bread for the three million travelers who were on their way to the land of Canaan.

One of the greatest experiences Moses had was when God called him to Mt. Sinai and gave him the Ten Commandments. God cut out stone tablets from the mountain and wrote on them the greatest moral code ever given to mankind.

Moses was a personal friend of the Living God (Exodus 33:11). Yet Moses was hungry for even more. That day, as God and Moses visited, Moses said, "If I have found grace in your sight ... I beg of you – show me your glory" (Exodus 33:12&18).

This is what Moses hungered for more than anything else. He had experienced religion, miracles, victories, and more, but there was an overwhelming desire, a hunger to see God's glory, the innermost essence of God himself.

Are you hungry for more? Do you want more than just attending church, Bible studies and meetings? Is your soul crying out for a new experience with Almighty God?

Then seek God's glory! Moses did and God showed him part of it. The effects were so great a veil had to be placed over Moses' face because of its great radiance from being with God. If you are truly "Hungry for more," then step out of the "box" and make the "glory of God" your goal! May the Lord bless you with his abundant love and glory!

HOROSCOPES

October 27 - November 2, 2011

CAPRICORN

A business transaction will go smoothly as long as you take the time to collect the right paperwork. Listlessness takes hold at home. Break it up with an outing, Capricorn.

ARIES

Suspensions mount at work. Keep yours to yourself. Aries. This is one battle you do not want to be a part of. Vacation plans stall for a reason.

CANCER

News from home rocks your world. Breathe, Cancer, breathe. A colleague invites you to lunch. Say yes. They have something important to tell you.

LIBRA

Get ready to scoop up the deal of a lifetime, Libra, as a friend makes you an incredible offer. More surprises are in store for the weekend.

AQUARIUS

Inventiveness counts, Aquarius. There is a better way of doing things. It's up to you to find it, and it's not what you might expect. Good luck.

TAURUS

A proposal receives mixed reviews. Look at it from every angle before you form an opinion, Taurus. A mission in organization can no longer wait.

LEO

You're always on the go, Leo, and it's starting to wear on you. Slow down and take time out to smell the roses. A favor is returned in a way you never expected.

SCORPIO

The search begins for an item for your home in someplace you least expect. A health crisis passes, thanks to diet and fitness changes. Keep up the good work, Scorpio.

PISCES

Every time you try to finish a repair, something gets in your way. Don't worry about it, Pisces. Life is going to settle down soon enough.

GEMINI

Things are looking up, Gemini. Gifts from the heart are exchanged among family. A personal matter is put to rest. A shopping trip with friends brings out the best in you.

VIRGO

You fall out of favor with someone dear to your heart. Do what you can to get back in their good graces, Virgo. Fudging on a matter at work is not recommended.

SAGITTARIUS

You're finally rewarded for all of your hard work, and it's okay to smile about it. You did a good job. A kitchen mishap ends in laughter. Who knew, Sagittarius?

Obituaries

Marie G. Pushruk

Marie G. Pushruk, better known as "Tweet," was born in Nome, Alaska on August 11, 1990. She died unexpectedly October 7, 2011.

Tweet lived in her hometown of Teller until she turned 18, and moved to Nome to work as a personal care assistant for her Papa James Omiak. She later moved back to Teller and was able to obtain her GED and work at the school as a substitute preschool and kindergarten teacher. Soon after, she moved back to Nome where she found a job as a housekeeper for the Norton Sound Health Corporation. Tweet was very happy and proud of her accomplishments. She was also a very family oriented person and always enjoyed being around her family and friends. Her beautiful smile will be greatly missed.

Tweet is survived by her loving parents, Brenda Pushruk and Delbert Okbaok, siblings Donna, George, and Lisa, niece Lallaurauq, nephew Ahnorak, Papa James, and many aunts, uncles, cousins, and friends.

Tweet is preceded in death by her namesake and grandma, Marie Omiak, papa Fred Pushruk Sr., grandma Josie Okbaok, papa Steve Okbaok Sr., grandma Gladys Rogers, uncles Fred and Rudy Pushruk, auntie Laura "Awk" Rush, cousins Brian, Jon Dean, MariRose, Robbie, Galen, Jennifer and good friend Kenny.

Marie was laid to rest in the Teller Cemetery on Saturday October 15, after a funeral Mass held at the school gym in Teller.

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson died suddenly on October 14. Paul entered this world on July 28, 1957 as the eighth child, and fourth son, of Harry, Sr. and Ruth Johnson. Whether folks knew him as Paul, "Paulie," "Koublou", "Chubs" or "Putty," it was apparent from a young age that he was a caring, generous person.

Paul spent his early years in St. Michael with his family until their move to Unalakleet in 1964. His school years showed evidence of his intellect and remarkable abilities. He attended the Unalakleet Day School and graduated from Covenant High School as the 1975 valedictorian. After high school he attended Le-

Paul "Koublou" Charles Johnson

Tourneau University and the University of Alaska.

Paul had a vast array of skills that made him successful at almost everything he did, whether it was running the Unalakleet Native Corporation, building boats, guiding big game hunts, dog mushing, commercial fishing/crabbing or just being an "uncle" to his vast group of biological or "adopted" nieces and nephews. He was as at home in a corporate boardroom as he was elbow-deep in an engine overhaul. He was a gifted public speaker and a patient one-on-one teacher. He could drive policy decisions and Iditarod dog teams with equal ease. He did all of this, and more, with a humility and grace that is uncommon. He never wanted recognition for any of his accomplishments, always deflecting the praise. His generosity was unparalleled whether he was paying a crew share or giving the shirt off his back.

Following in the steps of his grandfather, Henry Ivanoff, who ran in the original Serum Run, Paul became an accomplished dog driver. He ran the Iditarod Sled Dog Race in 1986 and 2011 as well as many other mid-distance and local races. He sat on numerous boards and held several executive positions. He guided annual spring and fall big game hunts that resulted in world class trophies. He operated the F/V SKJ in the Norton Sound king crab fishery, completing his most successful season this year. His meticulous aluminum boat fabrication resulted in strong, safe vessels.

All of this pales in comparison to the loving care he gave to his mother, Ruth, after his father passed away. Paul was her rock. Annually he would make special trips to allow her to spend time in the country she loves.

Accolades and praise are often given to those that pass on. But Paul is one of the few who have earned all that can be said. He lived his life to the fullest while keeping his God first, friends and family second, and himself third. He leaves a host of family and friends who grieve at the loss of a unique and irreplaceable man while rejoicing at the eternal joy he earned and is experiencing in Glory.

Paul is survived by his mother Ruth Laura Johnson, sisters Harri-lyn (Harold) Sager, Tia (Larry) Wil-son, brothers, Frank Sr. (Kathy), Merlin Sr. (Velma), Harry Jr. (Joan), Gus (Francine), Brian (Louann), Bruce (Gloria), Middy (Aurora) and numerous nieces and nephews, cousins, aunts and uncles. He was preceded in death by his father, Harry Johnson Sr., sisters Laura Dill and Esther Lestenkof, nephew Dane Johnson, maternal grandparents Henry and Laura Ivanoff, paternal grandparents Alexander and Malorie Johnson.

His memory and legacy will live on in the lives of all he touched.

Elouise Cobell

Elouise Cobell, an enrolled member of Montana's Blackfeet Tribe who led a 16-year landmark legal fight to get the federal government to pay an estimated 500,000 Native Americans for mismanaging their trust accounts, died October 16 at Benefis Hospital in Great Falls, Mont.

A great-granddaughter of Mountain Chief, one of the legendary Indian leaders of the West, she had been diagnosed with cancer weeks before her class-action lawsuit was given final approval by a federal district judge in Washington on June 20.

Born on the Blackfeet Reservation on Nov. 5, 1945, with the Indian name Yellow Bird Woman, Ms. Cobell was one of eight children.

Her survivors include: her husband, Alvin Cobell of Blacktail, Mont.; a son, Turk Cobell and his wife, Bobbie, of Las Vegas, two grandchildren, Olivia, and Gabriella, a brother, Dale Pepion of Browning, Mont., and three sisters, Julene Kennerly of Browning, Mont., Joy Ketah of Seattle and Karen Powell of Browning, Mont.

In 1996, Ms. Cobell and four other Native Americans filed a lawsuit against the federal government demanding that the government give Native Americans an accounting of billions of dollars it received for oil and gas leases and other uses of individual Indian lands held in trust by the United States.

After a long, tenacious fight with the government, the Obama administration agreed to settle the lawsuit in December, 2009, creating a $3.4 billion fund to, among other things, make payments to individual Indian money account holders. This was the largest class action settlement with the government in American history.

After finding government records of the Indian accounts inadequate to support an accounting of all items of the Individual Indian Trust, a federal judge declared the Indians could never receive a full accounting of their funds and other trust assets. He then urged the parties to engage in direct negotiations at the highest levels, negotiations that led to the historic settlement. The settlement was ratified by both Houses of Congress and approved by the President of the United States. It then went back to the United States District Court for the District of Columbia for final approval and judgment, which was entered on August 4, 2011.

Ms. Cobell served as lead plaintiff in the lawsuit and tirelessly led the effort from Browning, quietly raising millions of dollars for expert witnesses and other major costs associated with the litigation.

In part, Ms. Cobell used funds from her own 1997 "Genius Grant" from the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation's Fellows program to fund the cost of the lawsuit.

In 2005, she received a Cultural Freedom Fellowship from the Lannan Foundation, an award that cited her persistence in bringing to light the "more than a century of government malfeasance and dishonesty" with the government-run Indian Trust.

Two years later, she was one of 10 people given an AARP Impact Award (for making the world a better place), and in 2004 the National Center for American Indian Enterprise Development presented her with the Jay Silverheels Achievement Award. This year, she was named "Montana Citizen of the Year" by the Montana Trial Lawyers Association.

She received the 2002 International Women's Forum award for "Women Who Make a Difference," in Mexico City.

Ms. Cobell was one of the founders of the Native American Bank, based in Denver. Her professional and civic experience and expertise includes serving as co-chair of Native American Bank NA and as

Trooper Beat

On October 9, the Alaska State Troopers investigated an anonymous alcohol importation tip, which led to the seizure of two 750 ml bottles of Monarch Vodka destined for the dry local option community of Wales. The investigation showed that a 24-year-old female from Wales attempted to transport and conceal the alcohol inside grocery boxes via a local airline. Criminal charges were forwarded to the District Attorney's Office in Nome.

On October 10, AST confiscated four 750 ml bottles of R&R whiskey from a 26-year-old female resident of Gambell. The woman was attempting to transport the alcohol to the dry local option community of Gambell via Bering Air. Charges for Alcohol Importation against the woman are pending.

On October 10, AST contacted a man and a woman from Gambell, at Era Aviation and seized two 750ml bottles of Monarch Vodka. Investigation determined the pair was traveling to the dry local option community of Gambell. Charges for Alcohol Importation were forwarded to the District Attorney's Office against both individuals.

On October 14, Unalakleet AST contacted a 34-year-old male resident of Elim at the Unalakleet airport as he waited for a flight to Golovin. He was found to have marijuana hidden in a hand carry. The marijuana was seized and he continued on his travels. He will be summonsed to the Unalakleet Court on charges of Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance in the Fourth Degree.

On October 18, AST arrested Marvin Takak, 33, of Elim for Alcohol Importation and Misconduct Involving a Controlled Substance. M. Takak was observed outside of Bering Air attempting to conceal a bottle of R&R whiskey and a package of marijuana underneath a car tire after seeing the Troopers parked in the parking lot. Marvin was going to take both items to Savoonga. Marvin was transported and remanded to AMCC.

On October 18, Unalakleet AST contacted Charlie Doty, 29, of Unalakleet after he had been observed driving a 4-wheeler erratically. Doty was found to be intoxicated and was arrested for DUI. He was lodged at the Unalakleet Jail pending arraignment.

On October 18, Unalakleet AST observed Jason Toshavik, 18, of Unalakleet to be highly intoxicated and in possession of alcohol. Toshavik ran away while AST was conducting a separate investigation. AST attempted to locate him later to no avail. Toshavik is charged with MCA, Violation of Conditions of Release and Probation Violation, a warrant has been issued for his arrest.

On October 19, at 2:00 p.m. AST received a report of an assault in Savoonga. A 15-year-old juvenile was subsequently charged with Assault 4.

On October 21, at 9:46 a.m. AST received a report of a theft at the Savoonga city office. Currency was stolen and a door was damaged during the burglary. Investigation continues.

some wrong attitudes about this vision. We thank those very over-worked people for the time and attention they give each person, and we are sure they would like the process streamlined as well.

Thank you for giving us this opportunity to speak.

Hello out there,

Wow, this first day of snow is always so beautiful. But, then, I wake up every day and look outside at my scenery and think what a beautiful sight I have.

Anyway, I tried to order a computer from a company that says, “because Alaska and Hawaii are not a part of the 48 states, then we don’t service those states.” Last thing I knew Alaska and Hawaii are a part of the United States. And it seems to me, things like computers would be sent by air anyway, so why should our states be excluded?

Along with the outrageous prices we have to pay to travel within Alaska. After all, aren’t we the ones providing the oil and gas from our resources? I find it funny that a person could travel anywhere out the States for way less then it costs us to travel round trip to Anchorage, Nome, or just about anywhere else around here.

As for our homeless people here in Alaska, some of them feel like they could not live in their own hometown for some reason or another, and some are just down on their luck. Regardless of the reason, they are still human beings, and a lot of them do have some type of skill that they are good at. Just because they are down on their luck doesn’t mean they are less worthy then anyone else, it just means they need help along the way. Folks shouldn’t be looking down on their fellow man; instead they should be thinking of ways they might be able to help them. Remember, even just a hug can make a person feel good or even just listening to them.

Now that winter is upon us, please dress warmer. When folks don’t, they just harm themselves. Once a person gets frostbite or pneumonia then it is much easier for them to get it again. So stay safe. Take care y’ all. Happy holidays!

As always,
Karen Nanouk

House committee on fisheries hears from angry subsistence users

By Diana Haecker

A day before the Alaska Federation of Natives main convention started, the State’s House of Representatives’ special committee on fisheries held a meeting on salmon management in the Arctic-Yukon-Kuskokwim region. Nome area fishermen and representatives from local organizations gave the legislators and Alaska Department of Fish and Game officials an earful about the lack of fish returning, the hardship of subsistence users while commercial fisheries are allowed to take large amounts of salmon as bycatch out of the water.

The meeting, chaired by Fairbanks Representative Steve Thompson, started with the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game managers giving presentations. According to ADF&G officials, there are 12 stocks of concern, four of them in the AYK region. The AYK stocks of concerns have gone down from nine in 2000 to four in 2011.

Out of the four, three concern chum salmon in Norton Sound sub-districts and one is concerned with king salmon in the Norton Sound subdistricts 5 and 6.

The remaining stock of concern is Chinook in the Yukon River.

ADF&G numbers show that the state funds 15 projects in the Yukon with almost $2.2 million. In the Norton Sound region, funding is much less —$506,000 for 12 projects.

John Linderman, AYK regional supervisor of commercial fisheries, testified for ADF&G and said that the department does not know why the salmon are not returning to their home rivers. “We don’t have the answer to the decline of Yukon River Chinook. A lot of what we see is driven by the marine environment and it’s difficult to get information in that kind of environment,” Linderman said.

In the Nome area, chum haven’t returned in numbers for an adequate commercial harvest and at one time went into a Tier II, the most restrictive fishing designation. That is nothing new to locals.

Rose Fosdick, vice president of the Natural Resources Division at Kawerak Inc. gave invited testimony and requested funds from the state legislature for research and restoration efforts through the Alaska Sustainable Salmon fund.

Fosdick also demanded respect for the local people and the right to subsist off the land and the sea. She said that Inupiaq, Yupik and St. Lawrence Yupik cultures and traditions are based on hunting, fishing and living off the land. “We want to maintain our subsistence practices and prefer subsistence foods over store-bought food,” Fosdick said. “Our culture is not disposable or replaceable, our subsistence needs are no less important than offshore commercial fisheries.”

Fosdick pointed out that the National Marine Fisheries Service’s made it a first priority to meet spawning escapement goals and once met, the first priority then is to assure subsistence priority. However, she said, despite this, the mandated subsistence priority is not met.

“Commercial fishing interests have been consistently favored by government fisheries managers on state and federal levels,” she said. Commercial Pollock fishing trawlers intercept salmon as bycatch and prevent the fish from returning to their home rivers to spawn.

In Nome, the chum season starts with a closure and Fosdick said, regional ADF&G managers are basically out of options to preserve the chum stocks. “The burden must be shared with False Pass sockeye fishermen and the Pollock industry,” Fosdick said.

Given the dismal numbers of returns, Fosdick said that filing an Endangered Species Act petition would be an option. She requested that ADF&G fund research for the AYK sustainable Salmon Initiative, that the department solicit rural Alaskans’ input and to set meaningful bycatch numbers for both the federally managed Pollock fishery and the state managed False Pass sockeye fishery.

Testimony after testimony showed that people are getting impatient. Timothy Andrew, representing the Association of Village Council Presidents, which represents most of the lower Yukon and upper Kuskokwim Rivers, said that they are salmon dependent people. “Within the most recent three years, the return fell near or below minimum amount necessary for subsistence,” Andrew said. “In the state’s presentation I didn’t hear anything about the amount necessary for subsistence.”

He added that in the next year, it’s not likely that they can depend on fish runs to feed their families. Karen Gillis with the Bering Sea Fisheries Association said that there are massive knowledge gaps and that fishery managers need to improve their connection to rural Native residents. She pleaded for local voices in the process to come up with solutions.

“Our fishermen are having a hard time,” Orville Huntington from Huslia said. He said that he’s been a commercial salmon fisherman for many years, but out of concern for salmon stocks, he let his commercial fisher license sunset this year and only fished for subsistence. “I’ve gone to the federal government, Senators Murkowski, Begich, Akaka and Inouye, and all they tell me is to try the best you can without asking for money,” Huntington said.

Louie Green, Jr. from Nome was present to testify and said that the warning flags of declining salmon went up a long time ago. “But our concerns fell on deaf ears,” Green, said. Green said that Tier II has not improved the situation and that he is baffled by the local ADF&G management style. “Local managers allow you to take part in the fishery before salmon get up the river, then when escapement numbers aren’t reached, they shut them down on emergency order. To me that’s upside down,” Green said.

Green criticized the local Community Development Quota group to pay Alaska Fish and Game to count fish. “Fish and Game has an oilfield up there,” Green said, wondering why ADF&G has to be supported by Norton Sound Economic Development when NSEDC’s money should flow into community development instead of into state coffers.

Green argued that one way to get the salmon going again would be investing into science and a small-scale enhancement project such as the Hobson Creek “hatchery”, started by fisherman Tim Smith.

Smith testified via telephone and began his testimony saying that when listening to the department’s presentation he thought he was living in a parallel universe. “We have no useful information as to what is causing the shortages,” he said.

Smith went on to say that he manages the Hobson Creek hatchery and that despite producing healthy fry, he was denied an ADF&G permit to collect eggs. “And I don’t understand, why,” Smith said.

Roy Ashenfelter, Northern Norton Sound advisory committee chair, testified to the effect that commercial fisheries are allowed to curtail subsistence fishing. “We don’t hear anything from the governor or from the commissioner about that atrocity,” Ashenfelter said. “When are you going to ask the department to do their job?”

Fred Alexie, Sr. from Kaltag was present to ask for increased sonar monitoring to collect data from up-river areas like Bishop Mountain and Eagle. “The distance from the sonar station to Kaltag is too great. How do we know where fish from Pilot Station are going?”

“This summer we had a five-day closure right at the peak of the Chinook run,” Alexie said. “In all my years of fishing, I’ve never seen it that bad.”

Rep. Alan Austerman then said that comments are directed at ADF&G and that the hearing has highlighted a lot of things known in the AYK area. “I listen to the amount of dollars spent on research and I am wondering, where does that take us?” Austerman said.

“I am just as frustrated as the people who testified today. We should give the department notification that we do want to see stronger answers to what is happening and what it is going to take,” Austerman said in closing.

Committee chair Steve Thompson ended the meeting with the words, “Commissioner Campbell, Mr. Regnart and Mr. Linderman, I hope you took note. This will be followed up in January, when we will have more talks.”

Nome fares solid at Bush Brawl

By Stephen Palmatier

In what was the third invitational for the Nome Nanooks wrestling squad and perhaps their toughest competition yet, Nome finished in a strong third place this weekend at the Bush Brawl Wrestling Invitational held in Kotzebue. Finishing with a total point score of 154.5, Nome turned in one of its best team results of the season thus far, and only fell to Dillingham with 198.5 and the winner and host of the invitational, Kotzebue, with a score of 230.0 points.

Over the weekend, there were 13 different weight classes in which Nome took home two of the titles. The two titles came from Emery Booshu in the 120 pound weight class and Gabe Cabrera in the 126 pound weight class. These two titles tied three other teams with the same amount of winners and was less only than second place finisher Dillingham, who had five title winners for different weight classes.

Besides a few champions for Nome, the reason for their team's success in the tournament this weekend was their consistency of finishers. They had four other competitors finish in second place for their weight classes, which was matched only by Kotzebue. These four wrestlers included Dion Williams, Alex Grey, Jason Gilder and Chris Harvey.

The other winners in each weight class were Kenneth Savo from Dillingham in the 106 weight class, Brettlyn Reich of Kotzebue in the 113 class, Jared Miller of Dillingham in the 132 class, Douglas O'Hara of Kotzebue in the 138 class, Mario Kugo of Bethel in the 145 class, Gabe Simple of Galena in the 152 class, Trevour Chavez of Bethel in the 160 weight class, Macaelin Fiensburg of Dillingham in the 170 weight class, Kendall Alvarado of Dillingham in the 182 class, Thomas Hoseth of Dillingham in the 195 weight class, and finally Mishael Angaiak of Galena in the 220 weight class.

One interesting note from the tournament was that in every weight class that had player rankings, which was 10 out of the 13 classes, the #1 seeded player in their class eventually went on to win the title in the tournament.

The Nanooks look to build off a good weekend as they continue their season when they head to Anchorage for the ACS Invitational this weekend.

NOME WRESTLER —Gabe Smith finished in fourth place in the 126 lbs. class.

NOME VOLLEYBALL

The Nome Volleyball team competed at the Lady Lynx Invite in Anchorage. The tournament featured 20 teams from around Alaska. Friday night "pool" play was used to determine seeding for the Saturday bracket. Through pool play Nome qualified for the upper level bracket. Saturday results for Nome had Nome losing to Class 4A Wasilla and Soldotna.
