AuruMar conducts offshore gold leases feasibility study

By Diana Haecker

The South African joint venture that landed 26 large tracts during last September's Dept. of Natural Resources' offshore gold lease sale is planning to conduct environmental baseline studies, geophysical studies and to drill core samples first before deploying any mining apparatus into waters off Nome, company officials told Nomeites during a public hearing at Old St. Joe's Hall last week.

AuruMar (Pty) Ltd., equally owned by the world's third largest gold producer AngloGold Ashanti and the largest diamond miner DeBeers, has formed an Alaska subsidiary named AuruMar Alaska, Inc. which spent $5.5 million on the 26 tracts in the DNR offshore gold lease sale last year. They took the lion's share of large tract leases and secured rights to go for the underwater gold from east of the Nome River to west of Cripple River, totaling an area of almost 17,000 acres.

In a meeting at Old St. Joe's Hall, a thin crowd of a dozen Nomeites showed up to hear AuruMar's plans and ask some questions. AuruMar Pty General Manager Gary van Eck and AuruMar Pty geologist Urban Burger were flown in from the company's headquarters in Cape Town, South Africa for the meet and greet. They, plus a team of hired consultants for environmental and permitting work, led through the presentation.

The long and short of the meeting was that AuruMar hopes to develop the leases into a large scale mining operation over the next four or five years, but the next two summers will be spent to conduct environmental studies, geophysical surveys and core drilling to see if the resource warrants the effort. "We are following a structured process," assured van Eck. In 2014, when results of the studies have been analyzed, AuruMar Alaska will make the decision whether to proceed or not.

Plans for 2012

Urban Burger, geologist, laid out the timeline for activities on AuruMar leases this summer. From the beginning of June until mid-June, divers with the University of Alaska

Fairbanks' Institute of Marine Science will examine seafloor conditions of areas that were dredged by the BIMA, of recently suction dredged and undisturbed areas in areas up to 65 feet deep.

Research professor Stephen Jewett with the Institute of Marine Science of the University of Alaska Fairbanks and Lee Ann Gardener with RWJ Consulting were on the environmental team that conducted environmental studies for WestGold and its BIMA operation from 1986 to 1991. AuruMar has hired them on as environmental consultants and their plan is to begin diving and collecting data in early June to establish a pre-mining baseline.

NJUS to break ground for wind generators this fall

By Sandra L. Medearis

Motorists cruising the Nome-Teller Road in fall of 2013 and looking up to the left past the high school will see two new giant wind turbines on Banner Peak standing tall over the existing 18 turbines. The turbines, standing 246 feet tall, could save 500,000 gallons of fuel per year.

Nome Joint Utility System has received $4 million in a process of competitive applications for the project through Alaska Energy Authority. The utility is in negotiation with Bering Straits Development Co. for a land agreement to gain right of entry to place the turbines in the existing wind farm.

John K. Handeland, utility manager, told the NJUS board at its May 15 meeting that plans are in place for the foundation work for the 900 kW turbines that would get underway this winter. He expects the behemoth windmills to arrive on the first barge next season and to be standing mid-summer 2013.

NJUS now buys power under contract with BSDC. Using the wind-generated power put NJUS finances around $4,200 to the good so

Nome remembers fallen military

By Diana Haecker

The sun shone bright on Nome's Memorial Day parade as patriots led by Nome's military veterans marched from the Post Office along Front Street, Bering Street, Seppala Drive to the cemetery and then to Belmont Point.

A cold wind however swept inland from the open sea, making the red-white and blue flags dance and flutter. People stood at the side of the roads, waving flags as the procession went by, while some decided to join in and walk all the way to the Nome cemetery. Once there, VFW Nome chaplain Aaron Iworriagan said the opening prayer and Jenny Shield sang the National Anthem.

Commander of the Nome VFW post Jake Kenick held a speech reminding folks that Memorial Day is not about picnics and parades, but about remembering those who sacrificed their lives in defense of the American Way of Life and American values of God, country and family. He added that 6,400 Americans soldiers died in the conflicts in Iraq, most of them under 25 years old, reminding the rest of the nation to take care of those families who lost a loved one, and to help those who come home disabled or wounded.

City of Nome Mayor Denise Michels read Governor Sean Parnell's proclamation of honoring Memorial Day. Theresa Kenick, president of the American Legion Auxiliary spoke of the tradition of the paper poppies made by disabled veterans to honor the fallen, never to be forgotten.

Peggy Darling, president of the Ladies Auxiliary for the VFW, took to the podium welcoming those present to "a celebration of life" of the fallen soldiers. She said that Memorial Day takes the private suffering of a family who has lost a member to war, public. "Thanks for letting us today share your burden that you carry daily as we recognize the sacrifice you have made," Darling said. She also recognized the soldiers missing in action, the prisoners of war and the disabled veterans, whose lives have changed forever.

While the ceremony at the cemetery honored the fallen on land, the procession continued on to Belmont Point, where pastor Julie Elmore Yoder led through prayer and World War II veteran Robert Scott tossed a wreath out to sea for those who lost their lives at sea. Colleen Johnson with her daughters Meagan and Kaitlyn set free three white, red and blue balloons to honor the airmen lost in battle.

Dear Editor:

The rights of spring are upon us: geese are flying in, the ice is flowing out, NJUS is laying pipe, and Mary Reader is filling up bags of trash on Center Creek Road. Sometimes she's joined by her family and friends, but she sure goes out of her way to make the drive into town pretty, even now that she doesn't have to make it everyday. To everyone taking their part to spruce up Nome, thank you.

Parents and Community members we need to be reminding our children and others to wear helmets when they are riding on their bicycles, ATVs and especially when using the skateboard area behind the Recreational Center. Dear Editor:

It is springtime, school is out and lots of children and young adults are out on the streets on bicycles. As I drive to the Public Safety Building to attend EMT 2 classes and study for recertification as an EMT, I see lots of kids playing behind the Recreational Center on the bicycle/skateboard pad. The pad has plywood jumps and the foundation is made of concrete. Not ONE single time have I seen anyone wearing a helmet. It takes very little impact to the head from a concrete surface or the ground for that matter to cause swelling of the brain and major MINING FOR FOOD— The Long-tailed Duck, Clangula hyemalis, formerly known as Oldsquaw, is a sea duck that breeds in the Arctic and winters along both coasts of North America. It is one of the deepest diving ducks, diving as deep as 200 feet to forage on aquatic invertebrates, fish and plant matter. When foraging it is submerged three to four times as much as it is on top of the water.

Volunteerism Alive and Well

A recent ceremony in Nome honored men and women who give their time and skill to our community to make Nome a better place. Often these folks are unseen and unsung heroes. The Volunteer Ambulance Department and the Volunteer Fire Department Firefighters, Search and Rescue volunteers and Mets take many hours of training and continuing education to hone their skills. They make themselves available at late hours and put in hours of unpaid time to help their fellow Nomeites.

It is the spirit of volunteerism that makes us a great town. We have folks who do not hesitate to roll up their sleeves and get to work. We have folks who support the Clean-up campaigns, volunteer at their churches, help out at schools and at various art and talent show functions. Nomeites do take pride in their community and are generous with their time.

The spirit of volunteerism makes us special. When we see one of our friends, family or neighbors giving their time to the town we should not hesitate to give them an attaboy and thank them for doing their part to make Nome a good place to live. — N.L.M.—

CALLING IT QUILTS— House District 40 Representative Reggie Joule decided to not run for re-election. Joule is pictured during a Northern Waters Task Force presentation he held during Kawerak's Regional conference in April.

Kotzebue Representative Reggie Joule not seeking re-election

By Diana Haecker

After 16 years serving House District 40 in the House of Representatives, Reggie Joule is not running for re-election again this year. Joule is a Kotzebue Democrat who has been representing a large district encompassing Shishmaref, Kotzebue, the Northwest Arctic Borough and North Slope Boroughs for the last eight terms. Joule said in a statement that the decision came after consulting long and hard with his family. Joule made the announcement to allow other candidates to file their candidacy to represent the district. The filing deadline is June 1.

Joule said that his role in the Alaska Legislature was that of a bridge builder. "My time as a legislator has been used to increase the levels of understanding between urban and rural Alaska," Joule said. Joule sits on the House Finance Committee, the House Special Committee on Economic Development, Trade and Tourism and is a member of the House Majority Caucus. He also served as the co-chair of the Northern Waters Task Force. "The foundation we laid with the Northern Waters Task Force and the creation of the Arctic Policy Commission this past session will be a hallmark of success for the future of Alaska and will move Alaska forward," Joule said. "I look forward to see how our state continues to build on this foundation as I work on other opportunities and challenges closer to home."

Joule will finish serving his eighth term until the next Legislature convenes again in January 2013.

PLAN FIRST, MINE LATER— AuruMar (Pty) Ltd. General Manager Gary van Eck from South Africa explained the company's exploration plans to the Nome public on May 23.

They also started red king crab sampling in April together with local Alaska Department of Fish and Game biologists to examine crab for trace metals. The sampling will be continued as the divers look for juvenile king crabs in deeper waters. The diving team will dive off two vessels leased from local fisherman Adem Boeckman.

The scope of the environmental studies will be sampling the seafloor for plants, sediment trace metals, grain sizes, and to side scan sonar surveys. Those side scans are to map surface sediments, Burger said. So, what's the strength and timing of those sonar surveys? came a question from the audience. Burger couldn't give a definite answer, but said that the sonar will be audible in the water. In an email exchange with van Eck after the meeting, he clarified, "We do not expect them to have any negative effects. The higher pressure frequencies are above the range of human hearing, and previous studies in New Zealand and South Africa have shown there to not be any adverse effect on marine life. In addition, we will use soft starts, i.e. commencing work with low pressure pulses, eventually building up to operating sound pressures, giving any marine mammals an opportunity to vacate the immediate area," van Eck wrote. He added that the company will deploy marine mammal observers, and will cease operations if any marine mammals are observed within a defined radius of the vessel.

"Our survey plan will be displayed at a prominent location in Nome, and we intend to remain clear of divers. The upcoming tests in Seattle and Nome will determine the recommended exclusion distances," van Eck said. Sonar scans are also employed by the oil and gas industry to scan the sea floor by using sound waves to produce acoustic images. The industry uses air guns towed behind large ships that fire off underwater sound explosions. However, Burger says, the sonar they'll be using is nothing like the air guns used by the oil and gas industry.

From the end of June until mid-October, AuruMar plans to conduct geophysical surveys. A company based in Seattle, C&C Technologies is going to do the work, bringing to Nome two vessels, the 32-ft long Quicksilver and the 60-ft long Thunder. The Thunder is going to tow equipment to collect the side-scan sonar data. The geophysical surveys are planned to cover an area from west of the Cripple River to east of the Nome River, about 20 miles in length and two miles out to sea.

The sample core drilling is set to begin in August and will last for 40 days into September. The contractor is Denali Drilling and they plan on punching 350 holes into the sea floor, each 6 inches in diameter and 16 feet long. Burger described the samples looking like a huge "sausage of dirt" that will be geologically logged and examined to determine the gold content. A 150-ft. long landing craft with a drill rig plus a second support boat is going to arrive in Nome to perform the sample drill task.

In all, van Eck said that this summer, approximately 36 AuruMar and contractor personnel will be setting up shop in Nome at various times. Despite having a hard time to find accommodations for their employees, the company did manage to find suitable housing situations for their people.

Charlie Lean, Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. fishery biologist, said that he was happy that they put on a public meeting, although the meeting was not well publicized. "I am encouraged by their scientific approach to prospecting," Lean said. His main concerns were mining operations disturbing not only the shallow layers of the ocean floor but digging through bedrock and thus releasing toxic trace metals into the fragile marine environment. "I'm surprised to hear that you don't plan to dig deeper than 16 feet," Lean said. AuruMar's geologist Urban Burger answered that according to their data, much of the gold sits on the surface seafloor, above bedrock.

AuruMar has received a Nationwide permit from the Army Corps of Engineers and applied for a multi-year Alaska Placer Mining Application with DNR.

ENVIRONMENTAL WORK— Lee Ann Gardener with contractor RWJ Consulting of Anchorage told the Nome public about the environmental studies they plan to conduct during this summer on behalf of AuruMar.

THE GEOLOGIST— Urban Burger, AuruMar (Pty) Ltd. geologist from Cape Town, South Africa, informed Nomeites on planned environmental studies, geological surveys and core drilling that is to take place this summer and the summer of 2013.

Rasmussen's Music Mart closes its doors

By Diana Haecker

The clutter in the store is overwhelming. It takes the eye a few minutes to get used to the various different merchandise items that range from homemade art to plastic jewelry, fireworks and exquisite Native art to a mount of "the rare fur-bearing trout." Toys, mushing mittens, Nome Kennel Club and Iditarod Trail Committee memorabilia, music cassette tapes, books, maps, tools, china ware, you name it, it's there. But not for long.

Leo Rasmussen, standing in the midst of his store that has been his and wife Erna's since the mid 1970s, has decided to call it quits. "I guess we've had a going-out-of-business sale for the past five years," Rasmussen said. Why? Rasmussen quotes unaffordably high fuel and energy costs to keep the store heated and the lights on, plus the lack of patrons walking through the door and leaving cash in the till. But the real impetus for the grand final sale now comes as the Museum and Library commission have looked favorably on Rasmussen's bid to sell off the lot between Federal Way and Steadman Ave. as the site for the new Richard Foster building to house the city's Carry M. McLain Memorial Museum and Kegoayah Kozga Library.

According to Rasmussen, the Music Mart began its long history with Frank and Louise Richardson who opened the store in 1965. Back then it was located on Front Street, where today the Anchor Bar sits. "It started out as a music store with LPs and later cassette tapes for sale," recounts Rasmussen. The business was doing all right, and the owners could make a living. Leo and Erna Rasmussen then took over the store as managers in 1970 and five years later bought the business. They moved it into what used to be the old Glue Pot, across the street. Another move into the Old Federal building followed and in 1978, the pair bought the property on Federal Way and moved the business to its current location. The back part of the building, Rasmussen points out, is the old Episcopalian Church that used to be on 4th Avenue and Steadman. "We found paper clippings of its dedication in 1900 posted on the window sills," Rasmussen remembered. The rest of the building has been added on as the need for more room for yet more merchandise arose.

Rasmussen said that they ran their business by never financing their merchandise. "We always paid cash for it," he said. Pointing at rows and rows of paintings of flowers and abstract art, Rasmussen said that just like van Gogh, his sister was sponsored by her brother who bought most of her paintings so that she could indulge her artistic pursuit.

Rasmussen said that music was the initial specialty and at one point, they carried more than 4,000 titles as LPs or cassettes. But then he also dealt with groceries and people placed dry goods orders through the music mart that arrived via barge in Nome. "We had at one point ten container vans loaded with groceries and dog food coming into Nome," Rasmussen said. "Back then people still had storage space and stored food, unlike today."

Then came the fat years. When Alaska experienced the fabled once-in-a-lifetime economic boom with the building of the trans-Alaska oil pipeline, Nomeites also felt the money shot in the arm. "We never have seen volumes of business like this - not before and not after," recalled Rasmussen. He couldn't keep up ordering merchandise fast enough, but when the modern marvel of the pipeline was finished, the boom went bust.

"In 1987, I almost walked to the bank and handed over the keys," Rasmussen said. He just couldn't make enough money to keep the business afloat. The store somehow survived until now, although times were tough. Now, Rasmussen said, people never come to his store in the first place to look for things. "If they

Supreme court OK's redistricting plan

By Diana Haecker

After a lengthy battle between courts and the Alaska Redistricting Board charged with drawing up a new redistricting map that satisfies state and federal requirements, the Alaska Supreme Court voted 3-2 to approve an amended redistricting map in time for the political candidate's filing deadline on June 1.

The plan under which elections are going to be held is the one adopted by the board in April. The court rejected the Redistricting Board's reconfiguration of the southeast Alaska districts from May 15. The court order says that while the districts seem to comply with state requirements, there is the risk that the US Department of Justice would decline to pre-clear them under the Voting Rights Act.

This, in turn, could wreak havoc with the elections, as the notice from the DoJ would come so late in the 2012 election as to disrupt the election process. The current plan is not much different from the amended plan, but shows a few differences. The district for the Aleutian Chain is not split up anymore and the Fairbanks district is divided in such a fashion that the two senators, Joe Thomas and Joe Paskvan, don't have to run against each other. District 39 is the geographically largest district that includes Nome, the Bering Strait, Norton Sound, St. Lawrence Island and stretches all the way to the Canadian border in the east, as far as Eagle and as far south as McCarthy. The district was not subject to recent changes.

The Alaska Redistricting Board on Friday submitted to the U.S. Department of Justice a request for pre-clearance of the amended plan. Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act requires that certain states — including Alaska — submit changes to their redistricting plans for pre-clearance from the DoJ to ensure that the proposed changes are free from discriminatory purpose and will not result in retrogression in the position of racial minorities with respect to their exercise of the electoral franchise. The DoJ has 60 days to evaluate the new plan and to make a decision. Alaskans can comment on the plan. The Alaska Redistricting Board encourages citizens to comment in writing as soon as possible and mail their comments to the Chief, Voting Section, Civil Rights Division, United States Department of Justice, Room 7254-NWB, 950 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW Washington, D.C. 20530.

TESTING THE WATERS—Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's new tender vessel, the T/V Daniel D. Takak, was christened at a ceremony May 15 in Port Townsend, Wash. The vessel's namesake, long-time NSEDC tender boat captain Dan Takak, was on hand for the ceremony along with members of NSEDC's Executive Committee. Starting this summer, the T/V Daniel D. Takak will primarily serve the salmon fisheries near Golovin, Elim and Koyuk. The 74' by 23' vessel features refrigerated seawater tanks capable of holding 75,000 pounds of fish and can accommodate two 40' freight containers when the RSW tanks are not onboard. Built to last, NSEDC believes the T/V Daniel D. Takak will serve the residents of Norton Sound as long and well as the captain for whom it is named.

Rasmussen said everything in the store is discounted and what doesn't sell goes to the dump. He hasn't set a definite closing date, but he'll be leaving for a Norwegian cruise beginning of June and after that, who knows what the time line is. "I have no commitment from the city, so far," Rasmussen said.

So, if you're into Iditarod pins, dolls made in China, steeply discounted bike locks or fashion toe rings, old maps and other hidden gems, go there and scoop up a piece of history. As this reporter was leaving the store, the real estate appraiser Rasmussen has been waiting for finally comes through the door, his eyes trying to find their bearings in the collection of stuff that accumulated over the past 40-some years. Hurry, now, the sale won't last, Rasmussen adds.

Kotzebue hunter discovers more sick seals, Russians issue report on their observations of the disease

By Diana Haecker

Spring hunting turned up more seals that show signs of the mystery disease which is under a federal Unusual Mortality Event investigation. According to observers in Alaska, Canada and Japan the disease has afflicted all four species of ice seals and although hunters report a lot of healthy seals, more reports trickle in of seals that are disease-stricken.

A new twist to the evolving story is that a hunter in Kotzebue harvested seals that looked fine on the outside, but then showed signs of the illness when being butchered. Roswell Schaefer recently harvested four seals between Cape Blossom and Kotzebue. Two of them were sick. In an email to the Nome Nugget, Schaefer wrote that he and his wife began to butcher the animal when they found sores between skin and blubber. "I also noticed that each of these seals have lung disease of some sort," Schaefer wrote. "A large female I shot had one lung with white spots in it, a young female had severe lung disease and had only about a half inch of fat."

Schaefer said he landed six seals in a hunt in February. "All the seals looked OK except for white spots on one younger female," he wrote.

"What was different about this hunt was the fact that when we hunted previously in this area we landed more males than females. But this hunt we landed all females. The seals I landed lately, five are showing signs of being sick. Their outward appearance seemed good except for one very skinny young female. The sick ones had white spots throughout their lungs and had sores between the blubber and the skin. I did not notice any bleeding or cuts on the surface. One female my wife and I worked on this weekend, a natchiq, was very fat and looked great until my wife cut between the blubber and skin. There were sores about two inches in diameter and about 1/4 inch thick. They had pus in these sores and the sores made lesions in the skin area, like the animal was shot next to the skin. Some have brown blubber in the sore areas. Last fall I shot one young bearded seal with no hair and saw another one left on the ice by a hunter who knew this was a sick one," wrote Schaefer.

Schaefer also wrote that he noticed a few seal moms without their pups.

"The young ones may have been taken by red foxes but no sign of pups— only dens," he wrote. Schaefer wrote that in the past years, he had caught only one seal without hair, but it did appear healthy. "The white spots in the lungs is something I had not noticed before," wrote Schaefer.

While the UME investigation still continues, no new insights have come forth from the investigating experts.

However, a report from the Russian Chukotka branch of Pacific Science and Research Fishery Center that recently has been translated into English, revealing that diseased seals—albeit in unconfirmed numbers— have been seen in Russia as well. "In summer-autumn 2011, in the absence of ice in the waters of the Chukchi and Bering seas adjacent to the coast of the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug, there was an outbreak of diseases among ringed seals," says the report. "External symptoms of epizootics were expressed by such signs as mass exit of seals onto the shore, their apathetic behavior, high mortality levels and on individual animals — partial loss of hair, skin damages, mostly on their hind flippers, as well as ulcers and inflamed areas around the eyes and nose."

The Russians haven't found the disease in the other species of ice seals. "We detected 176 ringed seals on the coast, of which 13 had obvious signs of disease," the report says. "In addition, 65 deaths of ringed seals were recorded. These numbers are relative and can not [sic] be an estimate of the number of sick and dead animals." The Russians also have not found the cause of the disease.

The report says that maybe the disease may not be an epidemic but rather a "development of secondary infections in the spots of physical damage on the skin of seals. It is possible that these infections and injuries have different origins." But the authors also say that if it continues and expands in 2012, it can dramatically reduce the number of ringed seals in the Chukchi and Bering seas. "It will have a negative impact on both indigenous people for whom hunting ringed seal is an important part of the traditional economy, and on such rare species as the polar bear. Ringed seals are the principal feeding base for polar bears. Their survival may be threatened not only by reducing the number of seals, but by direct infection from hunting and eating diseased seals," says the report.

The authors suggest to monitor the disease by counting the seals, by inspecting each diseased seal and accurately recording all possible symptoms of the disease. Among other things the authors also stress to raise awareness among the indigenous hunters and coastal villages and organize collection of survey data on seals spotted on the coast, including sick and dead animals. They also suggest to partner up with institutes and laboratories for microbiological analysis of collected samples, as well as to determine pollutants and radiation content.

The report brought up the hypothesis that the outbreak may be associated with radioactive emissions from the explosion of the nuclear reactor at Fukushima last year. Tests by the University of Alaska showed preliminary results that did not support that hypothesis. But the Russian report states, "However, in our opinion, we can not [sic] exclude neither effects of radiation on the seal, nor a virus or other infectious agent, which could have rapidly mutated and therefore was not identified by the tests."

Dear Graduates,

Well, this is it. Graduation is here and you're ready to begin life's journey. I know you have lots of mixed feelings. That's the weird thing about most of life's big moments - very rarely do they consist of one emotion. But, that's OK. It helps to make the good times more precious and the not so good times bearable.

I've spent a lot of time trying to figure out what advice I could pass along. That's one of the hard parts about being a parent: trying to decide what should be said and what should be left for you to find out. Some people go through their whole lives without ever giving them any thought which explains why, at my age, I still don't have any answers.

There are 6 questions; who, what, when, where, why and how.

How? This will carry you through when the questions come along.

Who? Take the time to discover who you are and be your own person. Strive to be honest, respectful and happy. When you are at peace with yourself everything will fall into place. Always remember that you are not alone. You have your family and friends. For myself, I always want a guardian angel and God.

What? What will I do today? What is my passion? Discover what it is that burns inside you, and it will keep you going. Then, nurture it. Do it because that's what you love to do. You are dealing with so many things and changes you don't know which end is up. Then there is criticism. Even when it is deserved, it stings like a bee. If someone criticizes you, forgive. It will set you free and remove the dread from you. It gives you back your laugh. To forgive when you're hurt is pure magic. These are the most difficult periods of your life right now.

When? As hard as it may be, remember to take the time to rest and enjoy the miracle of each new day. With practice you will learn the pleasure of doing some things now, and to sometimes wait to plan for other things.

Where? You will always have the answer with you if you keep your home in your heart and take it to whatever you call home. Be an active part of your community and remember that the simplest act of kindness can make an enormous difference. You could even change the world around you.

Why? Never stop asking this one. It's the one that will keep you growing. Let it challenge you when you feel confused. Always think positive. Negative thoughts bring, or get, you in unpleasant problems. If you depend on your parents too much, sometimes you can't think for yourself.

Prayer: Gracious and Loving Lord we give you thanks for this gathering. I pray especially for those who are graduating; Lillian, Tammy, Ben, Dora, Elsie and Aaka. As they leave home and school work behind, and move into a new stage of life, be their guide.

Give them the true wisdom of your Holy Spirit that they may serve you in whatever field you call them into; jobs, family life or further education. Help them to be aware of your presence and forgive them when their thoughts are distracted and their heart is far from you. We all take different paths in life, but no matter where we are you are with us. Thank you for your unconditional love and mercy. Please keep us always in your loving hands. Bless each and everyone of us for our very breath comes from you. We honor your precious name. Amen

Are you healthier than a second grader? Part 3

Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

Mr. Slingsby's Nome Elementary second grade class recently sent me hand-written letters. Each letter contained a question regarding a medical problem. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

I broke my collarbone once. It hurts sometimes. Will it ever get better? Sincerely, Thank you. Grace Okleasik.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

I broke my femur once. How does a broken bone heal? Thanks Doctor Lawrence. Sincerely, Daniel Buffas

Dear Grace and Daniel,

Thank you for the excellent questions about broken bones. Did you know you have 206 bones in your body? Most people will break at least one of these bones sometime in their lifetime. The good news is that your body has the amazing ability to fix almost any broken bone. This takes keeping the bone straight and giving your body the nutrients to rebuild the broken pieces.

Doctors put broken bones in a cast to keep them straight. Sometimes they even use a metal rod or metal plates to hold bones together. As long as the pieces of bone can touch each other, they will grow back together.

Your body needs lots of good nutrients to fix the bone and make it stronger. Vitamin D and calcium are the most important for bone healing. You get these nutrients by eating good food like salmon and drinking milk.

Sometimes a bone will be sensitive after it has healed. This is normal and will go away in time. You may need to see the doctor if the pain is bad enough to prevent you from playing, running, or climbing.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

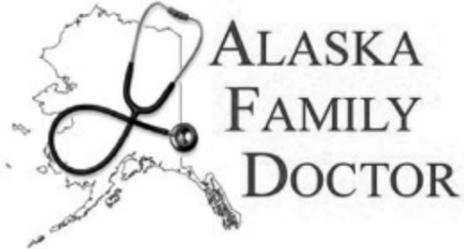

I got the wind knocked out of me once. What does that mean? Sincerely, Katie Smith

Dear Katie,

Getting the wind knocked out of you is no fun. I fell out of a tree once and got the wind knocked out of me when I landed on my back. I could hardly breathe for a few minutes. It was scary. I hope your injury was not too bad.

Getting the wind knocked out of you is actually a muscle cramp of the diaphragm. The diaphragm is a large flat muscle that divides your lungs from your stomach. Normally it moves up and down to help you breathe. The reason it is hard to breathe or even speak after getting the wind knocked out of you is that the diaphragm cannot move. It gets stuck. But the diaphragm will relax again and start working after a few minutes. So if this happens to you again, you can just lie down quietly for about two minutes. Do not be scared. Your diaphragm will soon relax, and you can start playing again.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you get rid of a stuffy nose and a headache? Sincerely, Raina McRae

Dear Raina,

I am glad you asked about how to get rid of a stuffy nose. Doctors call this problem "nasal congestion," and there are many causes. In general if your nose is full it means your body is trying to protect you from something. Sometimes the problem is an infection, like a virus. Other times it is just too much dust or pollen in the air.

The key to un-stuffing the nose is to get it to drain. You want the nose to be runny. Your nose makes a sticky fluid called mucus. The mucus catches things like dust and pollen and tries to drain them out of your nose. But the mucus can become very thick, especially during an infection, and can be hard to drain. The plugged passages in your nose can cause the headache.

The best way to get your nose to drain is to drink plenty of water. Your nose will use the extra water to drain the mucus, and the extra water often makes the headache go away. Some people also breathe the steam from a hot shower for a few minutes. This helps loosen up the mucus so it can drain.

Tell your parents if you have pain in your ears or fever with the stuffy nose. If so, you may need to see the doctor for some medicine. But most of the time extra water is the only thing you need.

Dear Dr. Lawrence,

How do you get rocks and dirt out of a knee scrape? Thank you, Paris Hebel

Dear Paris,

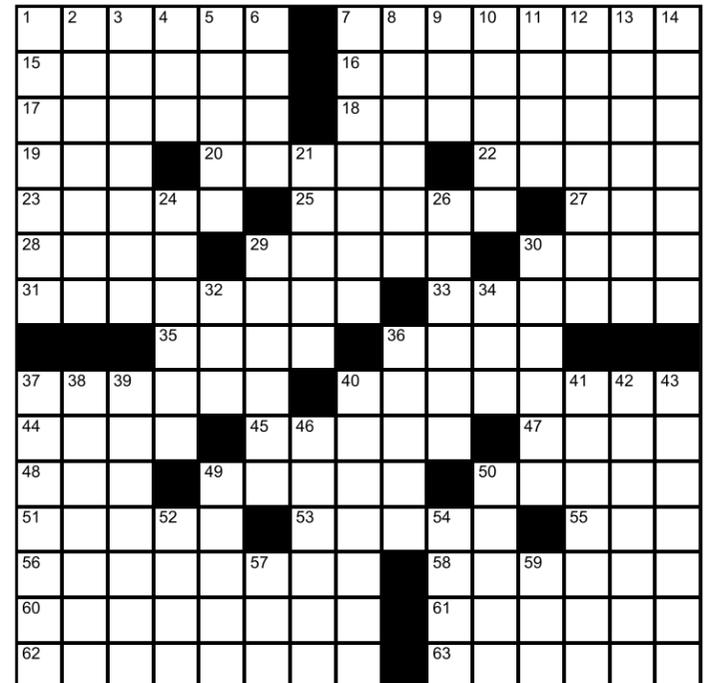

Great question. A knee scrape can be very painful, but as you know, if you do not get the dirt cleaned out, the knee will get infected with bacteria, and the pain will get worse.

So here are a few tricks for cleaning the wound in a way that will hurt less. First, find some baby shampoo. Baby shampoo can be used as a soap that does not burn in the cuts, just like it does not burn a baby's eyes.

Next, use running water that is about the same temperature as your body. The water should not feel warm or cool when you touch it. Water that is the same temperature as your body will not hurt as it cleans out the wound. Use the soap and running water to gently wash out all the dirt and small rocks from the scrape.

Once the wound is clean, cover the scrape with a clean bandage. Some people put a little antibiotic ointment on the scrape before applying the bandage. This is good to do on the first day, but after that, just wash the area with soap and don't use ointment, because it may slow the healing.

HOROSCOPES

May 31 - June 7, 2012

CAPRICORN
December 22 - January 19

Dare to be different, Capricorn, even in the face of adversity. People know you march to the beat of your own drummer and will respect you for it.

ARIES
March 21 - April 19

How bad do you want it, Aries? Bad enough to work hard for it? Because that is what is going to take. Don't commit to that which you don't really want.

CANCER
June 22 - July 22

Get with the program, Cancer. Folks are counting on you to do your part. A mix-up in communication turns out to be a blessing in disguise.

LIBRA
September 23 - October 22

Your motto this week is the three R's—reduce, reuse and recycle. Look for ways to be more environmentally friendly and it will ease some of those budgetary constraints, Libra.

AQUARIUS
January 20 - February 18

Bar none, you're the best person for the job, Aquarius. However, someone else wants a try, so give them the reins. Bigger challenges are headed your way.

TAURUS
April 20 - May 20

Patience grows thin at the office. Throw a little get-together to get everyone back on the same page. Don't mistake a fiend's icy embrace for anger. There is far more involved, Taurus.

LEO
July 23 - August 22

Use it or lose it, Leo. Admit you have talent and let it shine for others. Much prosperity will come of it. A phone call bears good news. Celebrate!

SCORPIO
October 23 - November 21

Dinner out with friends uncovers a real need. Do what you can to fulfill it, Scorpio. You'll have the resources and the time when you need them.

PISCES
February 19 - March 20

Relax, Pisces. The painstaking part is over. It will be easy sailing from here on out. A financial debt is repaid in time for you to make a big purchase.

GEMINI
May 21 - June 21

Talk it up, Gemini. The more you say, the more support you're likely to gather. A family member changes their tune rather drastically. Find out what's up.

VIRGO
August 23 - September 22

Stop beating around the bush, Virgo, and give it to them straight. Your friend deserves the truth, no matter how brutal. A workspace could use a facelift.

SAGITTARIUS
November 22 - December 21

Private matters turn public with a breach of confidence. Invest not in uncovering who did it but in how you can make it better, Sagittarius.

Saying it Sincerely

"Bruised & Broken"

Pastor Mike Christian Jr.

River of Life Assembly of God

A member of the Nome Ministerial Association

I once heard a little girl sing, "Jesus loves the little children, all the children of the world, red and yellow, black and blue..."

Did you catch it? "Red and yellow, black and blue." She was right you know! Maybe the words came out wrong, but then again, maybe they didn't. The sad fact is, there are many children and many adults as well, who are "black and blue." Many of those around us (many of whom we are not even aware), are living each day in a bruise and brokenhearted state. Jesus said that his mission in coming to the earth was to... "heal the brokenhearted" and... "to set at liberty them who are bruised" (Luke 4:18, cf. Isaiah 61:1-2a).

There are several reasons some people, even Christians, often withhold themselves from the bruised and broken. Many people are so bruised, broken or weary themselves, they cannot help anyone else. Also, they may not realize that others are hurting. Many who are hurting force themselves to appear to be happy. They put on a "Happy Face." And, sometimes people are so preoccupied with their own lives they don't even notice those around them who truly need help.

Those who are bruised and broken by events and situations in their lives need to know that there is "Someone" out there who really understands what they've been or are going through. They need to be introduced to the "Friend who sticks closer than a brother" (Proverbs 18:24). They need to have a personal encounter with the Lord Jesus Christ. He too, was broken and bruised. His very own disciples forsook him and fled when he was crucified upon that wooden cross. At one point, even his heavenly father, God, had to turn away because of the sin that he bore for all of us on that cross.

Jesus understands what's happened to you, what's happening in your life at this very moment. He knows your heart. He knows your pain and suffering. He's "been there, and done that!"

He has the answer for all the hurt, all the brokenness. And the answer is, turn your life, and everything you are or ever hope to be, over to him. Enter into a close, personal relationship with the Savior who can heal the bruises and mend the brokenness in your life. King David said in the 23rd Psalm, "He restores my soul!" Let Jesus, through the power of the Holy Spirit, reach into your life and "restore your soul." Let him bathe you in his love, his grace, and his mercy. Let him do what he came to do, for you. Let him heal the bruises and brokenness.

Remember:

"Humble yourself under God's mighty hand, that he may lift you up in due time.

Cast all your cares on him because he cares for you!" Peter 5:6-7

Blessings to you in Jesus' name!

HIGH AND RISIN' — White Mountain on Friday, May 25. The whole village kept watching the Fish River, in which the ice had stopped flowing, jammed to a standstill. The river had also risen very close to some of the houses along the river, making people anxious. This photo shows the basketball hoop standing amidst the ice in the river.

On 5-27 at 3:05 a.m., NPD responded to a disturbance near the Rec. Center. Amanda Noyakuk, 20, of Nome, was contacted and found to be highly intoxicated. Noyakuk was eventually transported to a local residence where she was released to a responsible party. Noyakuk was cited for Minor Consuming Alcohol (Under 21).

On 5-27 3:19 a.m NPD responded to a disturbance on Front Street. Investigation resulted in the issuance of two citations to Patrick Okitkon, 18, of Nome; and a 16-year-old female for Minor Consuming Alcohol (Under 21). The minors were transported to and released to a responsible party.

On 5-27 at 8:38 p.m., NPD received a report of an attempted bicycle theft occurring on E. D Street. The owner of a mountain bike observed a juvenile male attempting to steal the bicycle. When confronted, the juvenile fled from the scene, however the owner of the bicycle was able to take a picture of the suspect. NPD investigation continues with active efforts to identify the suspect.

On 5-27 at 11:16 p.m., NPD received a report of a stolen bicycle taken from a residence on Carston Way. The bicycle is described as a silver Schwinn mountain bike with blue forks. The theft occurred during the early morning hours of 5-27-12. Anyone with information about this theft is asked to call NPD at 443-5262.

As to be expected with warmer weather and open roads, NPD has received numerous reports of theft. Primary in these categories is the theft of bicycles and other easily transported items. Citizens of Nome should be aware that any unsecured property presents an easy target for those who would wish to take your property.

Bicycle locks are a primary means to secure your bicycle. Always remember to secure the bicycle to something that doesn't move and to run the frame and wheels if possible in order to secure all of the components of the bicycle. Registering your bicycle with the Nome Police is a good way for us to identify you as the owner. Registration is free and can be completed in a few minutes at NPD. We are located at 102 Nome Bypass Road. Members of the community should also secure gas cans, fuel and other fuel related items that may be at risk due to the higher cost of fuel. Mark them conspicuously with permanent marker with your name and phone number so they can identify if taken. A bike lock or similar device can be used to them to an immobile object.

And a reminder to: lock the doors of your residence; remove all valuables from plain sight in your vehicles; remove the keys from the ignition of any vehicle; and lock the doors of any vehicle. This will not only help keep your property safe, but also keep people from trespassing in/on your property or committing other crime.

By securing your property, it makes it more difficult for someone to take it.

Please immediately report any suspicious circumstances to the Nome Police at 443-5262. Any description of the suspicious person(s) will help us to identify them. If you are the victim of theft, please notify us immediately — the sooner we know about your loss, the sooner we can start working on recovering your property.

Thank you for your help in reducing crime in our community.

far this year, Handeland told the board.

“As the price of fuel increases, we will realize a more dramatic savings off the wind,” Handeland said. “We are looking at increasing energy efficiency every way we can.”

The large EWT 900-KW wind turbines are built to operate in the Arctic and are producing power in Delta Junction. Kotzebue’s generators of the same brand have gone into operation this month.

Board member Berda Willson cautioned that NJUS generators would never stop for good, as the grid needs continual power even when the wind is at rest.

Banner Wind operators and NJUS have agreed to share information on the wind alternative in continual open dialogue and keep each side in the know about plans to move forward.

Meanwhile, Carl Emmons, NJUS board member, had an idea to put an underused transmission line stretching along the way from NJUS generators to the Rock Creek Mine to work carrying excess wind generated power to the high school or other community facility.

“We’re in a unique situation. Most wind farms don’t have [ready-built transmission lines] in a small community like ours,” Emmons said.

He would second that idea, Fred Moody, board member, said.

“NJUS could sell energy to the school and cut down on their fuel consumption and help our sales,” he said.

NovaGold paid NJUS to construct the line to power the mine, now in limbo after shutting down preparation to mine.

NJUS and Delta Western have signed a contract for DW to provide fuel by barge this season. The first of two deliveries needs to arrive between June 20 and July 10, with the second and final delivery due by Sept. 10.

NJUS generators drank 2.12 million gallons last year. NJUS has required 2.6 million gallons for the oncoming season, which allows about a 400,000-gallon safety margin. Regardless of rumors and according to Handeland, NJUS had 571,000 gallons remaining at the NJUS tank farm in mid-May, enough to last until the new fuel arrived. A small portion of the fuel on hand belonged to the school, he said. On May 15, the generators had used 87,000 gallons for half of May.

The contract calls for DW to deliver between 1.6 million and 2.2 million gallons, allowing for revisions of the amount with three-days’ notice. NJUS and DW acknowledge that NJUS has requested an additional 400,000 gallons. DW must notify NJUS by June 1 if DW cannot come up with the 400,000 gallons additional fuel. If not, NJUS would be free to seek another source, ac-ording to the agreement.

The NJUS board demanded a tight contract on delivery, as DW, for reasons being aired currently in a court, did not deliver all fuel required by Bonanza Fuel last season. Bonanza Fuel has filed suit against DW for $1.5 million, the amount the Nome fuel retailer said it had to pay extra to have another company deliver fuel in January by icebreaker.
