FIRST BARGE—According to Port of Nome officials, the Northland Services tug Polar Viking and the barge Aleutian Trader were the first vessels to pull into the Port of Nome with cargo this summer. Right on their heels was the Alaska Logistics barge Western 7 pulled by the tug Ocean Mariner. Sea ice north of Nunivak Island slowed down their arrival in Nome.

Port study continues to eye Port Clarence and Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers came to Nome June 11 to harvest information from those who would be affected by a deep draft arctic port project.

The scoping meeting gave the public a chance to speak with the Corps and to discuss foremost alternatives for an arctic port in Western Alaska.

The scoping meeting grew out of a draft report released in March, followed by a general study charette in May, also held in Nome.

In such confabs, Port Clarence and Port of Nome have emerged for further study plus improvement of facilities at Cape Spencer and new construction at Point Riley.

The group met with folks at Teller and Brevig Mission later in the week.

Collecting the information from local people would lead to fulfilling requirements of the National Environmental Protection Act—NEPA, and help guide an environmental impact study on the Arctic Deep Draft Ports Navigation Improvements Feasibility Study.

The study team hopes to bring out a draft EIS at the end of the year.

With help from public input, the arctic port study group is zeroing in on local concerns to complement existing project study information, resources and “natural, social and cultural issues we need to be aware of,” according to Mike Salyer of U.S. ACE.

In putting together the Alaska deep draft arctic port system the group needs to hear proposed solutions and concerns regarding marine infrastructure, water related issues, natural resource concerns about fishing, birds, mammals, local econom-

COOLING OFF—Talan and Lyndsay Johnson enjoyed a day on the beach on June 12, with their grandparents Steve and Becky Korenek. On Monday, June 17, a record heat wave hit Alaska, causing temperatures to soar to 84°F in Nome, breaking the record high for the day and also for the month of June. National Weather Service meteorologist Jerry Steiger said that Unalakleet set a record of 88°F, McGrath was 93°F, Galena 89°F. Teller recorded a whopping 85°F and White Mountain was 88°F. Nome cooled down rapidly when the seabreeze kicked in around 4:15 pm causing temperatures to plummet from 84°F to 64°F within 15 minutes.

Corps hears concerns over subsistence

By Diana Haecker

The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the federal entity charged with building the nation's ports, has partnered with the Alaska Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities to tackle the development of marine infrastructure in western Alaska. To that effect, the Army Corps and representatives of the DOT held three meetings in Nome, Brevig Mission and Teller to scope public opinion on the prospect of deep draft ports at Nome or Port Clarence.

Increasing ship traffic due to climate-change induced sea ice loss in the Arctic already became evident in the last few summers.

This allows for faster transportation of goods between Europe, Scandinavia and Asia. This makes for more fuel and time efficient transportation than shipping through the Panama Canal.

What is apparent to Bering Strait and Norton Sound coastal residents witnessing the increase in traffic first hand has also become an issue with state and the federal government.

Existing facilities along the Alaska coastline are inadequate for current and expected navigation demands of multinational, federal, state and local sea traffic.

The lack of adequate facilities could compromise safety, national security, commerce and oil spill response capability of the United States, Lorraine Cordova, project manager of the port system study with the Army Corps of Engineers said.

Out of 14 sites, Nome and Port Clarence rose to the top of the list of potential deep draft harbors sites.

Nome may not have the depth of Port Clarence, but has infrastructure in place at the Port of Nome with tank farms, fresh water re-supply facilities and fuel headers. Also, there is an airport in close proximity.

However, Port Clarence, located about 70 miles north of Nome near Teller is a natural deep-water bay.

For years it has been a place of refuge for ships trying to outrun bad weather or unfavorable ice conditions.

The agencies' focus is on existing infrastructure in Nome and facilities that could be improved in Point

Greenland master teaches traditional qayaq building

By Diana Haecker

While fog hovered over the surface of the Bering Sea, NACTEC instructors and students stood ashore watching a traditionally made qayaq take to the water on her maiden voyage.

It was a big moment for the students because they helped build the qayaq during a NACTEC course.

Paddling the sleek vessel around the remnants of broken ice was Maligiaq Padilla.

Padilla, originally from Greenland, spent two weeks teaching NACTEC students from Koyuk, Unalakleet, Teller, Gambell and Brevig Mission to build traditional qayaqs.

The students were signed up for a business entrepreneurship course and picked a winner when Padilla agreed to teach qayaq building with the aim of integrating business and marketing skills from production of a Native art.

Padilla is a six-time Greenland national qayaq champion, is married to Willy Hensley's daughter Elizabeth and now resides in Anchorage with his young family.

Padilla said he learned the art of qayaq building from his grandfather in western Greenland, where he grew up in Sisimiut.

The art is still alive in Greenland where hunters are not allowed to use motorized vehicles to hunt.

“We still hunt by dog sled or qayaq,” said Padilla, explaining why there is still an active culture of sled and qayaq building in Greenland.

He said good hunters are selling seal meat and can make a living from their hunts. “In my area, we still eat a lot of traditional food,” he said.

Equipped with the rare knowledge, which all but died out in the Norton Sound region, Padilla was called to help rebuild a traditional 100-year-old qayaq that had been found scattered in piece in Koyuk. While in Koyuk, Padilla taught students how to build five qayaqs, Inuit style.

Koyuk school principal John Weems suggested he teach a course at NACTEC to reach more students than only those who had the chance

Bella Hammond calls for repeal of oil giveaway
Former First Lady says Parnell’s giveaway threatens Alaskans’ PFDs

Sign up to vote on the oil-tax giveaway
By Bella Hammond

People across the state are gathering 40,000 petition signatures, needed by mid-July, so Alaskans can vote to reject or approve the recent oil tax giveaway. While it makes no sense to give away billions of state dollars for nothing in return, there is a larger issue — another attack on the Permanent Fund. The governor recently said he might dip into the Constitutional Budget Reserve, and even the Alaska Permanent Fund’s earnings reserve to meet huge budget shortfalls next year. That means we are about to give away millions, or billions, of dollars from our state savings account to some of the most profitable corporations in the world. If the Constitutional Budget Reserve and Permanent Fund earnings can be taken, the next logical step is an income tax on Alaskans or worse, an attempt to break into the main part of the Permanent Fund that was created by legislators from both political parties. We cannot allow our future to be dismantled by a badly designed tax cut, and that is why I became one of three main sponsors to start the petition to repeal this poorly thought-out legislation. Since statehood, and adoption of our state Constitution, we have maintained a degree of control over our resources. Thanks to Jay Hammond and other leaders, we have saved $46 billion in the Permanent Fund and returned Permanent Fund Dividend checks every year to Alaska residents. The Permanent Fund was created to make sure Alaskans directly benefit from our commonly owned resources and to prepare for financial stability and new sources of energy when our oil is gone. Senate Bill 21, the governor’s oil tax giveaway, could leave Alaska broke even before the oil is pumped dry. Without our resource wealth, we will be hard pressed to have good schools, public safety and roads that create job opportunities for the next generation. Our resource wealth allows us to have self-determination. Control of our own resources is what makes us different from a colony. Before statehood, outside interests, from Russian fur trappers to Washington fishermen, controlled our resources and took them from our state. Generations of Alaskans fought for statehood so that we would benefit from resource development more than outsiders. We must protect this priceless future for our children and grandchildren. Jay Hammond said there would be attacks on our Permanent Fund and it would be up to Alaskans to protect it. Now is the time to act. Please join me and sign the petition so Alaskans can vote to decide whether the oil tax giveaway should be allowed. For more information visit Facebook “VoteYesRepealTheGiveaway” and the website, repealtheoilgiveaway.org. The future of our children and future generations is at stake. Former first lady Bella Hammond, widow of former Gov. Jay Hammond, lives on the Hammond homestead in Port Alsworth. <http://www.adn.com/2013/06/13/2937258/compass-sign-up-to-repeal-th-oil.html#storylink=cpy>

Chief’s Notes By Nome Police Chief John Papasodora

I preface this with the fact that I do have a dog. Though many would say I ‘own’ a dog, it is clear to me that it is probably the other way around! He lets me know when he wants to go out; play or is bored. I have to accommodate those needs. Like many others, I do my best to ensure that I am responsible in the care of my dog (and I have lots of help). But despite our best attempts, sometimes our animals get away from us or create problems for others — like using the neighbor’s yard as a latrine; barking; running off, or just being a general nuisance. In its wisdom, the City Council has expressed the will of the community in establishing animal control regulations that reduce the possibility of our animals becoming a nuisance to others, as well as to protect people and other animals from injury or disease. With the departure of our long-term contract animal control officer last summer, the Nome Police have worked towards providing for animal control services within the City. This has been a learning process everyone. Throughout the ‘learning process’, I’ve been approached with a variety of questions and issues relating to Animal Control policies and thought this would be a great opportunity to review some of the codes and issues that apply to animal control. Animal control regulations are contained in the Nome Code of Ordinances; Chapter 10.30 (you can review them at <http://www.codepublishing.com/AK/nome/>). The code is fairly comprehensive with portions extending back to the early 1990’s and are updated as needed. Some of the portions of the Code that folks should know about: • 10.30.010 License – –All dogs, cats, and horses must annually be licensed with the City (done at City Hall); –To be eligible for licensing, the owner must show proof of rabies and parvo immunization; –No person may ‘harbor’ a dog, cat or horse that does not display a current license tag; –The annual license fee is $30 for ‘unaltered’ dogs and cats; and $15 for animals that have been spayed or neutered (with proof provided). • 10.30.020 Unattended animals prohibited No animal may run at large within the city. No person having charge or control of an animal may permit the animal to run at large within the city. • If we catch your dog or cat running at large on public or private land (except in your own yard), we will impound the animal and issue a citation. • The fine: LICENSED ANIMALS - $50/$75/$300 for the 1st/2nd/3rd offense within one year; • UNLICENSED (see above) - $100 first offense and $300 after that! • 10.30.050 Impounding – If we impound your animal, you will have to comply with 10.30.010 (Licensing) to get the animal back. – For each day that your animal is at the shelter, there is a $30 fee for taking care of it. • 10.30.060 Immediate destruction. –Though every attempt will be made to safely capture a ‘large animal’ running at large, if we are unable to capture the animal, it may be immediately destroyed. –Any dog found running at large that does not carry and exhibit a current license tag or evidence of rabies vaccination may be summarily destroyed. –Any animal may be destroyed if during attempts to capture it, the animal causes the officer to fear bodily injury. • 10.30.070 Destruction of mad or vicious animals. –An officer may immediately destroy animals that pose a menace or immediate danger to the inhabitants of the city. These are just some of the regulations that apply to animal control issues within the City of Nome. So what should you expect? • We will be enforcing the Nome Code of Ordinances fairly and impartially. Sometimes you may see a police officer working on an animal control issue; sometimes you may see a Community Services Officer. The goal is public safety. • We will respond to calls from the public about animal control issues as

Good Ol’ Summertime in Nome
Now that the first barge has arrived we can get into the swing of summertime in Nome. At last it is really here (we hope)! While we gather in friendship and in fun at the Nome Folk Festival we need to reflect on how lucky we are to have the right to peaceful assembly. We hear about government crackdowns on peaceful protest for a park in Turkey. We watch news stories about the Syrian government firing rockets, bombs and poison gas at its citizens. We hear of suicide bombers blowing themselves to pieces with mass casualties in Afghanistan. Can we imagine how uncertain and on-edge the citizens of those nations feel? What would it be like to raise a family under those circumstances? They have no sense of peace. They go to sleep at night not knowing if a bomb will destroy their lives. When we gather for our Midnight Sun parade and Nome River Raft Race festivities let’s savor the freedom, security and sense of community we enjoy. Let’s look at our different ethnic and cultural backgrounds and be thankful that we can appreciate each other for our sense of community and caring for each other. Let’s enjoy summertime in Nome.

Rally in Juneau calls to strengthen chinook bycatch laws

A demonstration of 30 representatives from the Inter-Tribal Council, the Association of Village Council Presidents and the Alaska Native Brotherhood held a rally last week to get the attention of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and the State Board of Fish as they discussed salmon Bycatch laws.

In the demonstration local representatives with Kawerak’s subsistence director and Art Ivanoff of Unalakleet.

Ivanoff said the rally in Juneau borrowed a theme from the Canadian’s “idle no more” movement. “It was an attempt to gain the attention of policy makers at both the state and federal levels on the plight of Chinook salmon and the impact on folks in the villages,” Ivanoff wrote. “Chinook provides” and the demand for equity were some common slogans shouted during the march from Marine Part to the Centennial Hall, where the Board of Fish and North Pacific Council took oral testimony.

“We stressed the need for inclusion in processes that impact our subsistence way of life,” Ivanoff wrote in an email to the Nome Nugget. “We also realized this was a good opportunity to stress the need for amendments to the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery and Conservation Act which comes up for reauthorization this year.”

The group plans to hold a larger rally in October 2013 when the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council reconvenes in Anchorage.

Galena has power back

Galena Incident Management Team PIO Terry Solomon reported that on Friday, the Tanana Chiefs Conference sent 17 heads of households back to Galena to check on their homes. They evaluated damages and returned to Fairbanks on Monday.

On Saturday Galena received 18 volunteers from Koyukuk by boat. They had crew leaders and certified HazMat technicians on each crew. “They have been doing incredible work assisting elders with the cleanup of their yards and homes,” Solomon said. They also have a certified electrician in the group. This effort is being funded by the Koyukuk community.

The transmission lines across Alexander Lake have been repaired so all of Galena is being powered by the City of Galena power plant.

However, Galena needs certified residential electricians to evaluate individual homes, identifying electrical supplies needed and completing the repairs to ensure a safe electrical system. If there are any volunteers who are interested, contact City Manager, Greg Moyer at 907-656-7300.

On Friday, Solomon said, the town received 20 portable outhouses. Governor Sean Parnell last Friday requested a federal disaster declaration for the 2013 spring floods along the Yukon River and its tributaries. The disaster has left 194 homes uninhabitable.

Joint Preliminary Damage Assessment Teams from the State of Alaska, Federal Emergency Management Agency, Small Business Administration and Red Cross were deployed last week to determine the extent of the damages.

The preliminary damage assessment estimated more than $10 million in damages to public infrastructure and more than 225 homes within these communities.

Alaska Arctic Policy Commission met in Barrow

The Alaska Arctic Policy Commission held a two-day meeting in Barrow last week to continue its mission of creating a comprehensive state strategy for the Arctic. Commission co-chairs, Senator Lesil McGuire (R-Anchorage) and Representative Bob Herron (D-Bethel), focused the conference on how to ensure Alaska’s needs are met during critical federal policy decisions regarding the Arctic.

The commission is made up of 26 commissioners, including Nome Mayor Denise Michels.

During the meetings, members discussed a Letter of Introduction to send to the federal government by June 30. Members feel the Letter of Introduction needs to be sent as soon as possible due to the recent flood of several “arctic” policies by our national government that now does, could and will touch Alaska. The AAPC previously formed six exploratory committees, focused on themes identified in the Northern Waters Task Force, that – in a very short time period – were tasked with bringing to the full Commission a summary of issues, actors, questions, challenges and priority areas for future consideration.

During the first part of the meeting Tuesday, members of the Commission listened to concerns and ideas from indigenous stakeholders including Elder Wesley Aiken, North Slope Borough Mayor Charlotte Brower, North Slope Borough Chief Administrative Officer Jake Adams, Hugh Parkoktak from the Olgoonik Corporation, Popsy Kinneaveak from the Tikigag Corporation, Anthony Edwardsen from the Ukpigvik Inupiat Corporation, U.S. Arctic Research Commissioner Edward Itta, Chair of the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission Harry Brower, NSB Director of Wildlife Management Taquilik Hepa, NSB Director of Health and Social Services Doreen Leavitt, NSB Director of Public Works Charlie Sakeagak, and open testimony from several villages.

On Wednesday, the commission received a brief update on the National Strategy for the Arctic Region from White House Office of Science and Technology Policy Assistant Director for Polar Science Brendan Kelly and NOAA’s Acting Administrator Dr. Kathy Sullivan.

Online via teleconference were several senior officials who made themselves available for questions including Department of the Interior Deputy Secretary David Hayes, Bureau of Ocean Energy Management Director Tommy O. Beaudreau, U.S. Coast Guard Rear Admiral Thomas Ostebo, Department of State Ambassador David Balton, and Maritime Security and Arctic Region Policy National Security Staff Director Tony Ceraolo.

During the final part of the conference, members received presentations by Lisa Pekich with an overview of ConocoPhillips, Bob Loeffler with the Institute of Social and Economic Research on Mine Permitting and Monitoring, and Deantha Crockett from the Alaska Miners Association.

The Commission’s next meeting will be in Unalakleet on August 28-29.

• Port study

ics analysis and engineering feasibility study.

The EIS will assess the potential for positive and negative effects of marine infrastructure on the environment in terms of air and water quality, endangered species, fish and wildlife and historically significant properties, according to Salyer.

They especially need to know about local subsistence practices and patterns, Salyer said.

"We don't want to design something where the area is used for subsistence resources," he said.

Mayor Denise Michels pushed for a deep-water port at Nome for economic development and as a base for response to emergency situations in the waters of the Bering Strait and the Chukchi Sea.

Traffic is increasing and the world is moving forward, she said. "We don't want it to go without us," Michels said.

On a local immediate level, Michels cautioned the USACE against dredging when salmon smolt were using the mouths of anadromous streams. Anadromous? Those are streams where fish return to spawn.

A causeway extended onto minus 35 water depth would make Nome a strong site for policing arctic waters, enhancing national security and marine security, she added.

U.S.ACE, lead federal agency for permitting, design and construction, is partnering with state Dept. of Transportation & Public Facilities with assistance from ARCADIS, consultants in infrastructure design, engineering and management.

This year, the group intends to continue to develop alternatives and to select a tentative plan, followed by a feasibility analysis next year. Design will follow in 2016 and then construction in 2017.

The team already has information on hand from prior study and prior work.

Information put together building the breakwater at Port of Nome several years back will have value for the engineering side of a local deep-water port project, Salyer said.

Port Clarence has a lot going for it to become a deep-water port, Nomeite Chuck Wheeler said with natural deep water already present, and a good navigational entry, both used for more than 100 years of whaling.

"It is a refuge in a storm," he said, his main reason for favoring Port Clarence.

Wheeler, however, said he favored a strong role for Nome because it has an airport and a road to the Teller-Brevig Mission area.

Those attending brought out these additional points:

- Traditional villages and hunters say Grantley Harbor area at Teller and Brevig Mission has a dense population of seals for subsistence because of plentiful fish available.

- In doing the EIS, the team should be sensitive to subsistence and those resources that are not monitored, such as tomcod, an important subsistence resource.

- A deep draft port near the Bering Strait and Bering and Chukchi seas would have value to rapidly respond to oil spills.

- Shipping should be decreased in spring and fall when marine mammals are concentrated.

- A deep-draft port and resulting increase in shipping would bring commerce to Western Alaska, desirable if subsistence resources were preserved along with respect for the environment.

- Nome has a good supply of quarry material to construct a deep draft port.

- Crew changes during which large numbers must embark and disembark could be served by existing infrastructure in Nome.

Even if the deep draft construction were turned over to a private concern in a public-private partnership, the information collected during the study would go along with the project, Salyer said.

TELLER MEETING— USACE official Mike Salyer leads the meeting in Teller to gather public opinion on what needs to be done to improve marine infrastructure in the area, on Thursday, June 13.

Spencer at Port Clarence, where the Coast Guard operated a LORAN station from 1961 until 2010, and the potential for new construction at Cape Riley near Teller.

Mike Salyer, environmental resources section chief with the Army Corps, led the Teller meeting. He said that approximately 47 residents attended the Brevig Mission meeting the day before. In Teller, a core group of 25 people gathered at the Bingo Hall/Community center to listen to a short presentation of the process and then voice their opinions. A few people floated in and out of the meeting.

The National Environmental Policy Act meetings mark the very beginning of a long process before proposals for concrete port projects are fleshed out. Salyer asked the public general questions such as: What are your concerns over various types of marine infrastructure?

"Are there any natural resource concerns? Fish? Birds? Marine Mammals?"

Are there other concerns, are there water related problems?" Salyer asked.

Environmental concerns

Most people who spoke feared adverse environmental impact and the impact on subsistence hunting and gathering in the area rich in marine mammals, fish and birds, greens and berries. Prior to the meeting, Joe Garnie voiced concerns about a port developed in a prime seal pupping area. "At this time of the year, literally thousands of seals come into this area for calving. They give birth on the ice here and within a few days they're gone, but they need that short period of time when the ice is thin and if that ice is broken up I don't know what it'll do to them if there is a lot of boats in here," Garnie said.

During the meeting, Sarah Okboak, a shareholder of the Teller Native Corporation, pointed out that the land surrounding Cape Riley belongs to the native corporation and that it is prime hunting grounds for many species and a lookout point for marine mammals.

But she also asked how the hunters are to go about their hunting when there are ships and boats all over the place.

"When they [hunters] see a beluga whale or walrus out there, how are they gonna shoot when there are boats and people in that area?" Okboak asked. "And those ships, how do we know what kind of waste do they put out there?"

As an example, Okboak cited the mysterious occurrence of hundreds of sick ice seals that showed loss of hair, skin sores and respiratory illnesses. Despite a two-year federal investigation into the so called "unusual mortality event", the cause of the 2011/2012 outbreak has not yet been solved. Could it be environmental reasons, Okboak asked?

Okboak also suggested that the Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game do a study on animals that frequent the area and how they would be impacted by development.

Other residents commented that ships are already coming in and out of Port Clarence and that a dock or some navigational improvement could mean jobs. Also, the prospect of storing oil spill equipment at the former Coast Guard LORAN station was brought up.

But a dock or port? The consensus was the encroachment by the many vessels that are already coming in, is increasingly affecting the way Teller residents' live their subsistence lifestyle.

Comments asked for creation of a marine buffer zone to protect subsistence hunting and fishing near shore.

Sarah Okboak said that, in her mind, land is more precious than all the money in the world. "We like our land. We love our land. We're not going to give any land away that belongs to our people. I want you to understand this. The price you pay is nothing. Your money is nothing," Okboak said.

Josie Garnie then asked if there would be additional meetings and formal government-to-government consultations with the affected tribes. Yes, there would be, she was assured.

How about that planning charette that was held in Nome in April? Did any concrete suggestions come out of that meeting? Mike Salyer said, no, nothing has been decided and that there are several possibilities.

One is to deepen the channel in Nome and couple the effort with creating barge landings in Teller. "But this is not about individual port facilities," Salyer pointed out.

Other concerns included pollution, the lack of oil spill response equipment. Jenny Lee with the Teller Traditional Council pointed out that there is a need for the equipment but also training of local residents.

Josie Garnie wanted to know: Who regulates ship traffic? DOT's Mike Lukshin said it's the United Nation's International Maritime Organization, the Coast Guard enforces the federal laws; the Alaska Dept. of Environmental Conservation enforces water discharges in state waters.

The IMO is a specialized agency of the United Nations responsible to improve the safety and security of international shipping and to prevent marine pollution from ships. It is also involved in facilitating international maritime traffic.

Foreign-flagged vessels have the freedom to so-called "innocent passage" as long as they don't dock on U.S. ports. That complicates matters in terms of regulating ships passing through the Bering Strait.

Teller resident James Isabell pointed out that, with the arrival of foreign ships, there is a high risk that invasive species are introduced.

And that, he said, could greatly hurt indigenous species.

Could there be a zero discharge, no dumping allowed policy installed and enforced?

A man commented that there were a lot of big ships at Port Clarence last summer. "You know darn well that if the sewage tank gets too full, they hit the switch and drain the tank a bit," he said.

There was also talk of carrots washing ashore and of salmon that had the taste of oil. "Everyone of us has at least one salmon a year that taste like oil," an elder said.

Josie Garnie said that the influx of more vessel traffic is going to happen no matter whether Teller or Brevig people find it agreeable or not. "It concerns me, the contamination that might be coming off of the boats, and I'm wondering who regulates that contamination. I'm wondering if there is an oil spill or any other kind of spill, who is going to clean that up? And who is going to pay for the cleanup? If one thing is impacted here, it impacts everything else. We live in the most beautiful place in the world and its really sensitive, it's really vulnerable, the environment. So if one thing gets impacted it impacts everything else. It impacts the people, and we live off the land here and we won't be the same if we don't have it."

At the end of the meeting, as officials closed up the Bingo Hall, Lorraine Cordova shared her thoughts on what was learned over the last three meetings. "I've learned a lot, I've learned that vessels that are selling oil in this region are parking large vessels in Port Clarence and lightering onto smaller vessels for distribution to the smaller communities in the area," she said. "They can avoid taxes and they can ship lots of oil on larger ships that can't be accommodated by other ports here."

She said that she learned a lot about different species that are being harvested here, but she also heard the wish for better economic opportunities. "There is a lot of interest in jobs and how a project could benefit the communities," she said. In all three communities she heard that there is the need for economic improvement. "Not only do they want protection of the environment that they live in but they also some economic opportunities for their families to live a better life," Cordova said.

The time line is that the public comment is to be analyzed and woven into a draft EIS slated to be published come December 2013.

A 45-day comment period on the draft EIS will follow and trigger another round of public meetings.

The final EIS is scheduled for publication in November 2014.

Alaska schools free of No Child Left Behind

Nome school district moves forward with realistic standards

By Kristine McRae
On June 10 the state Department of Education and Early development issued a press release that outlines Alaska's intention to implement its waiver from major provisions of the federal No Child Left Behind Act. In the latest round of approvals for release from the conditions set forth by the Bush-era standards, Alaska joins the 40 states that have decided to regulate student progress at a local level. Many states found the stipulation that every student be proficient in math and reading by 2014 or face punitive consequences unrealistic.

Instead, states are showing the Education Department their individual plans to prepare students and improve teaching practices. In Alaska, the goal is to reduce non-proficiency by half over 6 years. According to the press release, "students will continue to take state assessments in reading, writing and math. Parents and educators will use the assessment results to help understand how well each student meets state academic standards." Instead of just focusing on math and reading proficiency tests, the plan will rank schools on a 100-point scale, taking into consideration factors like attendance, students who take the SAT, and the annual improvements. And, instead of passing or failing, schools will receive a rating of one to five stars. States would then diagnose why a school is not improving and apply customized fixes. In his address to the school board at last week's meeting, superintendent Steve Gast told the board that, with the new NCLB waiver, Nome is looking into hiring a new Title 1 reading teacher. "Funds are there," Gast said, "we just need to see if we can make it fit and spend our federal money."

In other district news:
Superintendent Gast reported that he is still addressing discrepancies over the state's claim that Nome's extension program has not followed regulations concerning the home-schooling program, and that the district may be responsible for returning up to $43,000. "The program was approved several years ago, but over the years, the statutes and regulations have changed. That information didn't get passed along, so now we need to go back and see what we didn't do," Gast said. Gast also said that he had a meeting scheduled with the Education Commissioner and that the issue should be resolved by August.

Seventeen people attended the Community Engagement training last week as part of Nome Public School's ongoing effort to integrate community involvement into the schools. "The district will be seeking a community advocate who would act as a liaison between district and community," Gast said.

Gast announced that 21 students are attending summer school, nine of whom are working with high school teacher Caleb Weaver to recover credits through the APEX online program.

In the midst of plans to remodel Anvil City Science Academy to expand restroom facilities and to potentially accommodate more students, the carpet was flooded when a sewer pipe burst recently. Because the carpet is attached to tile, which is attached to asbestos, the district is planning to incorporate all work into the existing remodel project.

Joel Alowa, of Nome Eskimo Community, thanked the district for its partnership in recruiting students for its summer skill-building camp, Pathways, at which junior high students are gaining knowledge in math and science.

The board approved two new contracts for junior high teachers. Hana Jones and Bill Magness will join the staff to teach math and social studies. Gast reported the elementary school now has an open fifth grade teacher position, as Rochelle Bushey is moving into the social worker/counselor position.

Since the district decided to reopen the elementary school playground to the public almost three weeks ago, six windows have reportedly been broken.

Chief's Notes

soon as we can.

- If you are contacted about your animal, realize that we have a responsibility to the community and are not directing our attention towards any person, but rather equally towards all persons who own pets.

- We will do our best in being proactive in enforcement. Please assist us

- Finally, we will destroy an animal only as a last resort. DON'T expect the police to be patrolling to destroy animals.

WHAT CAN YOU DO TO HELP?

- DO NOT APPROACH ANY ANIMAL THAT YOU DON'T KNOW!

- Report aggressive animals immediately!

- Report at-large animals so we can secure them and decrease risk to the public.

- If you are an animal owner – be familiar with the code and your responsibilities.

- Register your animal; make sure shots are current; and make sure your animal is under control at all times.

- If you have an aggressive animal, a fence or enclosure may be needed to protect others.

I am confident that regulations we work with were designed to ensure public safety for all of us. Nothing is more tragic than to learn of a child being mauled and/or killed by a 'domesticated' animal, or to inform someone that they will have to endure painful rabies injections because we are unable to confirm the vaccination status of an animal. But it also projects a very strong reality – that animals are unpredictable in so – can be very dangerous.

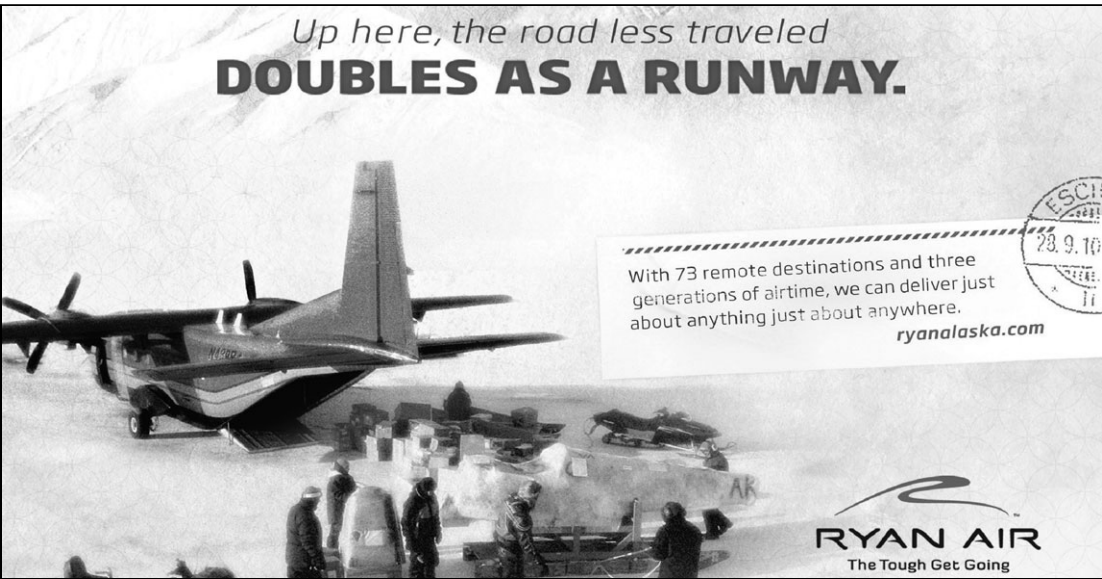

Help us to increase public safety by ensuring that your animals are properly licensed and vaccinated. A license tag can frequently result in our being able to quickly contact you so you can pick your animal up without having to take a trip to the shelter. If your dog is aggressive towards people or other animals, insure that a proper enclosure is used to prevent small children or unsuspecting members of the public from being injured.

Through voluntary compliance and the community working together, perhaps we can increase the level of public safety while reducing the need

Multiple short walks are better than single long walks for controlling blood sugar

By Bob Lawrence, MD
Alaska Family Doctor

Short walks after meals are better than a single daily long session of exercise for lowering blood sugar, according to a new study published in Diabetes Care.

The study is small, but it may change the way people with diabetes or pre-diabetes think about exercise.

Most organizations, including the American Heart Association, recommend 30 minutes of exercise daily. Until now, the timing of the exercise did not seem to matter. The idea has been to move the body. Medical experts have not emphasized whether physical activity is better performed in the morning or evening or after meals. But the new data suggests that a little exercise after meals may be best, especially for people trying to control blood sugar, such as those with diabetes or pre-diabetes.

For this study, researchers selected ten inactive people, average age of 69, with pre-diabetes. The scientists then tested each participant for blood sugar changes after walking on a treadmill for either: 45 minutes in the morning; 45 minutes in the afternoon; or 15 minutes three times a day after meals.

Researchers found that the shorter 15 minute walks after meals were more effective at lowering glucose levels measured three hours after a meal compared to the longer walks.

This data is encouraging for people with pre-diabetes or diabetes mellitus type 2 who are in their elder years. Everyone experiences a brief elevation of blood sugar after eating. A temporary increase in the blood glucose level is normal. Within an hour, glucose levels should return to pre-meal levels. But as we age the rate at which the blood sugar returns to a normal level slows. This puts us at an ever-increasing risk for developing diabetes as we become older.

According to the research, staving off elevated blood sugar and the subsequent risk of diabetes requires only a few simple steps...literally 15 minutes worth of steps taken soon after a meal.

Walking after a meal is thought to help control blood sugar levels in two ways. First, physical activity helps move glucose from the blood into cells of the body by inducing small pores in cells to open, which in turn allows glucose to flow from the blood stream into the cells.

Second, a post-meal walk promotes the use of glucose for energy rather than fat production. Muscles use glucose as fuel. Leftover glucose is converted into fat. It is like coming home from the grocery with several bags of food. Some of the food is used to make dinner, and the rest of the food is stored for future use. A post-meal walk causes more of the food you just consumed to be used right away so that less is available for storage in the cupboard of your belly.

Post-meal walking is not difficult to work into the normal flow of the day. Walking to work, the post-office, the store, or just enjoying a stroll after dinner with family or friends can easily provide the recommended exercise in ways that allow you to attend to other responsibilities. The key is to end each meal with some form of light physical activity. Think of it like dessert for your muscles.

Obituary

John George Fuller, Jr.

John George Fuller Jr. died peacefully with his loving wife and family at his side on June 11, at Primrose Retirement Community in Wasilla, Alaska.

A Committal Service with Full Military Honors was held June 18 at Fort Richardson National Cemetery.

John "Jack" was born November 2, 1921 in West Brookville, New York. He was the son of John and Agnes (King) Fuller.

John's military career began at the height of World War II. In 1942, while a senior in high school he enlisted in the United States Marine Corps. He earned his paratrooper wings and served in the Pacific Theater for two and a half years, in both the Guam and Iwo Jima campaigns.

He served with the First Infantry Battalion, Twenty First Marines, and Third Marine Division on the Isle of Iwo Jima. As a young platoon Sergeant he took command of his company when all the officers were dead or wounded and enabled his platoon to continue the attack. For his action he received a battlefield commission as a second Lieutenant and was awarded the Silver Star for gallantry.

In 1946, while a student at Adrian College he joined the Michigan National Guard. He was later granted a permanent commission after earning his Bachelor of Science Degree in 1948. While attending Adrian College, he met and married Lenora "Lee" Duling. They have two daughters, Abigail and Johnalee.

In 1964 the family moved to Alaska where Jack and Lee taught in the Bureau of Indian Affairs School at Point Hope, and later at Gambell.

On the way to his teaching post in Point Hope, he enlisted in the First Eskimo Scout Battalion, Alaska National Guard. He served first as a Commander for Company F, and in 1968 he became a full time member of the Guard. When the family moved to Nome, he served as the Battalion Planning and Training Officer, until he became the Commanding Officer of the First Eskimo Scout Battalion in 1972. He continued as Commanding Officer until his retirement six years later. Jack often cited his duties as Commander of the First Eskimo Scouts as the most rewarding part of this life.

He graduated from the Armor Officer Basic and Advanced courses and is a graduate of the Army Command and General Staff College, at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. While serving as Commanding Officer of the First Eskimo Scout Battalion, he was awarded the Legion of Merit, the third highest award of the Army for the outstanding skill, initiative and professionalism he displayed as a commander. He was the first officer of the Alaska National Guard to achieve this honor.

He also served as chairman on the Board of Directors of Norton Sound Health Corporation. When he retired from the Army National Guard in 1978, he was elected to the Alaska State Legislature and served as the District 22 Representative for eight years.

In 1986 he was the first Colonel to be recruited for the Alaska Defense Force that was created by General Pagano under Governor Bill Sheffield. He retired from this post in 2006. Since his retirement he has been active in the Wasilla Senior Center, serving on the board and as President.

Commercial sac roe herring harvest low, average roe recovery high

By Laurie McNicholas

The Norton Sound commercial sac roe herring harvest totaled 310 short tons as of Monday, reports Scott Kent, assistant management biologist for the Norton Sound area, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game. The catch is well below the market quota of 800 to 1,200 tons of sac roe herring set by Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

However, Kent said the estimated average roe recovery rate of 13.8

percent is excellent. "Roe percentages have ranged from 11.4 percent to as high as 15 percent in some areas," Kent wrote in an email to The Nome Nugget. "Approximately 25 permits fished. Fish tickets are still on the processor. It has been a struggle to find ripe herring in large amounts in areas not inundated with ice...at least for very long. Fishing conditions have been particularly difficult in the area from Tolstoi Point south to St. Michael Bay."

NSEDC arranged with Icicle Seafoods to bring a processing vessel and four tender vessels to Norton Sound to buy herring from resident fishermen. The NSEDC board of directors approved a pricing system to pay fishermen $350 a ton for 10 percent roe, with a sliding scale of $20 per full percentage point. For example, fishermen receive $370 a ton for 11 percent roe, or $320 a ton for 9 percent roe. A base rate of 7 percent roe recovery fetches $200 a ton. Herring with roe recovery rates of less than 7 percent are purchased as bait for regional fisheries at $100 a

NSEDC biologists provided daily reports on ice conditions, water temperatures and herring in Norton Sound from June 6-14 via the company's website. Their efforts in-

Subsistence salmon fishing opens in Nome area

Courtesy Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game

The Nome Subdistrict subsistence salmon gillnet fishing schedule took effect June 15. A subsistence permit is required to harvest salmon when subsistence fishing in Nome subdistrict waters and may be picked up at the Alaska Dept. of Fish & Game Nome office. Please bring a State of Alaska proof of identity or other proof of identity that indicates Alaska residency. Permits are free.

The weekly gillnet fishing schedule for all marine waters west of Cape Nome in the Nome subdistrict is from 6 p.m. Wednesday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Marine waters east of Cape Nome will remain open seven days a week for subsistence gillnet fishing. Gillnets up to 300 feet in length are allowed in marine waters.

The weekly gillnet fishing schedule for all fresh waters of the Nome subdistrict is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. The fresh water areas open to gillnet fishing are listed on the permit. Gillnets up to 50 feet in length are allowed. No more than one-half of any channel may be blocked by gillnets.

A new regulation adopted by the Alaska Board of Fisheries allows beach seining during subsistence gillnet fishing periods from June 15 through July 25 in the Nome subdistrict.

Subsistence hook and line fishing is open at all times. Sport fish bag limits apply when subsistence fishing with hook and line outside of Nome subdistrict subsistence areas. Check the back of the Nome subdistrict subsistence permit for the subsistence areas. Snagging is not allowed anywhere in fresh waters. The Penny and Cripple rivers are closed to both sport and subsistence chum salmon fishing.

The area from Cape Douglas to Cape Rodney is open seven days a week. From Cape Douglas to Cape Rodney and from Topkok Head to Rocky Point there are no catch limits in marine waters for subsistence fishermen. Check the back of the Nome subdistrict subsistence permit for the catch limits for the subsistence areas between Cape Rodney and Topkok Head.

cluded several aerial surveys.

The ADF&G announced in a press release the opening of the sac roe herring fishery at the request of the buyer on June 7.

“As of this morning, water temperatures between 5-6 degrees Celsius have been recorded amidst the floating ice and, further away from melt water plumes, water temperatures as high as 7 degrees have been observed,” stated the release. “Approximately 50 tons of herring were also observed by NSEDC biologists on June 5 near Cape Denbigh. Taken collectively, all available assessment information suggests that large schools of ripe herring are accumulating offshore in deeper, relatively warm water, but will soon approach the southeastern Norton Sound coastline to spawn in abundance, possibly as early as this weekend. Once major spawning begins, excellent catch rates with high roe recovery are expected in the fishery for 2-4 days, which will be followed by a sharp decline in catch rates and percent roe as the larger, older age-class herring vacate the spawning grounds.”

However, ice conditions delayed herring fishing for several days and adverse weather sometimes hampered aerial surveys. On June 14, Kent reported a cumulative harvest of 80 tons of sac roe herring with an average 13.6 percent roe recovery rate.

An ADF&G crew set up a herring sac roe test fishery at Cape Denbigh on June 11. Kent reported the following test fishery findings in an email to the Nugget on Monday:

“Variable Mesh Gillnet test fishery samples have not been summed up at this point, but it appears that the bulk of the herring belonging to the older age classes have already spawned in the Cape Denbigh subdistrict. Age-4 through age-7 herring have dominated samples collected in the Cape Denbigh area over the previous two days. Age-4 through age-7 herring comprised 75 percent of the samples collected on June 15 and 87 percent of the samples collected on June 16. Samples collected at the northern end of the St. Michael subdistrict on June 16 show decent numbers of older age-class herring on the spawning grounds. Samples collected at Black Point consisted of 54 percent age-4 through age-7 herring and 46 percent age-8 and older herring. Fifteen percent of these were herring age-10+. Catch rates and good roe recovery should continue in the St. Michael subdistrict today and possibly tomorrow, followed by a sharp drop off late Tuesday or Wednesday.”

NSEDC attempted to facilitate a herring sac roe fishery in 2012, but ice conditions prevented Iceicle Seafoods’ vessels from reaching Norton Sound.

NOTICE TO INTERESTED PARTIES SPACE FOR UAF-AFES NOME HOUSING EXTENSION
The University of Alaska currently leases a four bedroom, two-bathroom, residence with a washer/dryer and garage for housing space in Nome, Alaska. This lease is due to expire on June 30, 2013. The Lessor has expressed a willingness to renegotiate a lease extension for a one (1) year period with one (1) additional one-year renewal Option, which will include an increase in rent. The University feels that the facility offers unique advantages for the operation of its research programs, thus best meeting the needs of the Nome community. Owners of other facilities, or interested parties, who have space of a comparable size, quality, and price that they are willing to provide to the University under the same terms and conditions, including an occupancy date of July 1, 2013, please submit a written offer to: University of Alaska Fairbanks, Facilities Services, Attention: Real Estate Management, PO Box 757380, Fairbanks, Alaska 99775-7380 or via facsimile to 907-474-2661 by the close of business on June 25, 2013. Such offers, if deemed suitable, may be considered for acceptance by the University, or it may be determined that a competitive process is necessary, in which case all interested parties may be given the opportunity to participate. If the University does not receive any such offers by the close of business on June 25, 2013, it will presume that no other comparable space is available and may enter in to direct negotiations for space from the current Lessor. HOROSCOPES

June 19, 2013 — June 25, 2013
CAPRICORN December 22-January 19
Drum roll please, Capricorn. Months and months of hard work finally pay off, and you receive praise all around. A game at home results in victory.
ARIES March 21-April 19
Transportation issues take precedence this week. The options are numerous, but only one is right for you, Aries. A relative could use some advice.
CANCER June 22-July 22
What a charmer you are, Cancer. You can be dazzling when you need to be, and your supervisor will be counting on that at a meeting. Do not disappoint.
LIBRA September 23-October 22
Let go, Libra. Your need to be in control is starting to impede the progress on a project at work. Step aside and give the reins to someone more qualified.
AQUARIUS January 20-February 18
The chain of command at work begins to break down, and you're left to figure a situation out on your own. Relax, Aquarius. You know what you're doing.
TAURUS April 20-May 20
Training opportunities abound. You must seize them, Taurus, if you hope to advance. A change in vacation plans turns out to be a blessing in disguise.
LEO July 23-August 22
Get your game face on, Leo. The competition at home is heating up. A myriad of offers come your way. Not all are on the up-and-up. Choose carefully.
SCORPIO October 23-November 21
Stand back, Scorpio. There's a new sheriff in town. Listen up and fly right. A tickle of the ivories gets the party started. Dreams of old return.
PISCES February 19-March 20
Love has taken a back seat to work for far too long, Pisces. Make a change for the better and your relationship will flourish. A long paperwork trail tests patience.
GEMINI May 21-June 21
Giddy is the word for you these days, Gemini. Life is full of possibilities, and you're boiling over with excitement. Share it with a friend down on their luck.
VIRGO August 23-September 22
Investment opportunities are plentiful, and the time is ripe. You could always use some extra cash, Virgo. You pass a test at work with flying colors.
SAGITTARIUS November 22-December 21
Ready, Sagittarius? You better be. Your family is counting on you to turn a situation around. Your fitness routine could use a shakeup. Look to a friend for help.

LEARNING IS FUN— Maligiaq Padilla shares a laugh with his students Russell Apatiki, Ryan Topkok, Season Haugen (hidden) and Kenneth Rock as they work on the qayaq's frame on Thursday, May 30.

to work with Padilla in Koyuk.

Thus Padilla arrived in Nome this summer.

Padilla and his NACTEC students built two qayaqs, one 18-footer and one smaller in size. The frames were built out of oak and pine wood, lashed together with artificial sinew and covered with what Padilla jokingly called “colonial sealskin” or ballistic nylon.

He said there are 43 different qayaq styles. “It depends on what area you use them in, what the weather is and what animals you’re hunting,” Padilla explained. At the NACTEC workshop, the students were engrossed in their tasks: Wyatt Saccheus of Koyuk finished tying the frame with sinew. Ryan Topkok of Teller and Season Haugen of Unalakleet lashed the frame on the second qayaq and then began to sand antler to create lashing toggles.

“We use bigger skin boats with sails,” pointed out Russell Apatiki from Gambell while working on the lashing.

NACTEC director Doug Walrath was pleased with the course as it hit two birds with one stone. The project taught students a Native art skill in the hands-on building of the qayaqs and secondly, they learned how to market their product themselves to buyers. The objective is to cut out an ‘art buyer’ or middleman in order to maximize the profit for the artist.

NACTEC plans to keep one qayaq and sell the other one to get funds to bring Padilla back to Nome to teach more qayaq building courses.

When the qayaqs were built and done, the students got to take them out for a spin.

After Padilla demonstrated their use on that foggy June 10 evening in Norton Sound, the students were allowed to go out for a paddle in the safe constraints of the Nome swimming pool the following day.

Padilla was in the pool with the kids, teaching them not only to paddle but also how to roll the qayaq, an essential skill. While some students showed apprehension of being rolled over and finding themselves stuck upside down under a qayaq, trust won out.

Practicing to position their bodies on the water for the roll, they tweaked their spines and trusted the master to bring them up when they couldn’t complete the roll on their own. Wyatt Saccheus practiced patiently until he demonstrated a complete roll.

The smile when he came up—priceless.
