FCC to help expand broadband services in rural Alaska

By Diana Haecker

The Federal Communications Commission last October decided to modernize U.S. communications infrastructure and to expand broadband services to underserved areas through a new "Connect America" fund that aims to connect all Americans to broadband. More than 14,000 rural Alaskans should benefit from the Connect America fund once the build-out is completed. While the expansion has been decided at the policy level, now programs need to be created to make it a reality.

Three high-level officials with the Federal Communications Commission office of Native Affairs and Policy visited Nome and other parts of Northwestern Alaska last week to get a handle on what is needed in communication infrastructure and policy in rural Alaska. Although their meeting in Nome to hear from the public was poorly advertised and only announced a few days prior to their arrival, more than a dozen people found their way to Old St. Joe's last Wednesday. The message was clear and simple: Northwest Alaskans crave fast, reliable and reasonably priced Internet service and improved cell phone service. Pearl Mikulski, vice president of community services at Kawerak Inc., stressed the importance of the FCC officials to have come out to Northwestern Alaska and to witness first hand the difficulties its residents face.

The FCC regulates everything that has to do with airwaves: television, radio, telephone, cell phone and Internet. "By the time you have your first sip of coffee, the FCC has already touched your life in multiple ways: listening to the radio as you wake up, watching the morning news on TV and maybe checking your messages on your phone," Geoffrey Blackwell told the audience at last week's meeting. Blackwell explained that they want to go where the problems are. Under those premises, they hit the jackpot. Blackwell, chief of the FCC office of Native Affairs and Policy, along with Daniel Rumelt, senior policy advisor, and Irene Flannery, deputy chief, experienced the gaps in service first hand when they traveled to Noatak, where their cell phones told them 'no service' and that they appeared to have traveled out of the country. And when they had to use the internet in Kotzebue or Nome, they felt they were taken back to a distant past. "The Internet connection was so slow [...] we don't even remember if we ever experienced this slow of a service," Rumelt said.

How can the FCC help, given that they are regulators, not an agency dishing out grant money? Barb Nickels with the Nome Chamber of Commerce asked, "What can we do to help you help us?" Blackwell answered to provide comment that he can take to the commission. "The hardest part of my job is to build the record," he said.

Jim Stimpfle vented his frustration. "Our service here is so slow, you can't even download a movie on our regular GCI or TelAlaska service, much less Skype," Stimpfle said. "The Bering Strait School District

Nome man pleads guilty in strangulation death

By Sandra L. Medearis

Shawn Oquilluk will likely serve less than 30 years in prison after a night of domestic violence that left his girlfriend dead in the couple's home.

Last Oct. 7, police found the body of Marie Pushruk, 21, on the floor of the house with Oquilluk, also 21, lying beside it. A bloody steak knife was stabbed into the floor nearby. The woman appeared to have been strangled.

The state charged Oquilluk on Murder One—with intent to cause death, according to court documents. Oquilluk pleaded innocent. In a plea deal, Oquilluk pleaded guilty Monday afternoon to an amended charge of second-degree murder—with intent to do injury, with the court agreeing to cap the sentence at 30 years plus probation and additional conditions to be set by sentence. Judge Ben Esch set the sentencing for Nov. 1.

Oquilluk, dressed in a gold prison uniform, buried his head in his hands and appeared overcome with emotion as he squeezed out the word "guilty" after a long hesitation.

"I think this is very hard for him," Oquilluk's attorney, Angela M. Green told the court.

After the proceedings, Brenda Pushruk, Marie Pushruk's mom, and other family members, including

Failed septic causes water restrictions at AMCC

By Diana Haecker

Prisoners at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center had to contend with rationed water use for three days last week as AMCC officials scrambled to get the septic system of the facility fixed and up and running again.

AMCC superintendent Michael Dunham said that the reason for what prisoner Kyle Mike called "inhumane conditions" was a septic tank full of sludge that did not separate the liquids from the solids anymore and pushed the entire waste out to the leech field that is only intended to receive liquids. Dunham said that guards noticed ponding in the leech field during a time when Nome experienced no rain. The problem was traced back to the septic tank and at first, Nome Joint Utilities and the local septic pump contractor "Suck'n Shine" tried to

SB 130 Passage Celebration

On June 14, 2012, the Alaska Native Heritage Center hosted a celebration for the passage of SB 130: an Act Establishing an Alaska Native Language Preservation and Advisory Council. Special guests of this celebration included Alaska's Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell, the primary sponsors of the bill State Senator Donald Olson and State Representative Alan Dick, former State Senator Georgianna Lincoln, and many other individuals and organizations who worked hard to support the successful passage of this landmark Alaska Native Legislation.

Ballot Measure 2 – Vote August 28, 2012

Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell held 10 hearings across the state on Ballot Measure 2, the initiative to recreate the ACMP. I was grateful that two of those hearings were held in our district - Kotzebue and Barrow. Our request for a hearing in Nome was denied. The initiative would reestablish a coastal management program in Alaska. Please familiarize yourself with this issue and talk to your families, friends, neighbors and local elected officials. More information can be found at the Division of Elections' website: http://www.elections.alaska.gov/ei_primary_bm.php

Disappearing King Salmon

As you know, the governor requested the federal government declare this summer's low king salmon returns a disaster. If Washington, D.C. does issue a disaster declaration this would provide much needed financial aid to our struggling villages. I am hopeful that this will happen. My office is monitoring this, and if you have any questions please don't hesitate to contact us.

Also, the governor has appointed a team to take a comprehensive look at why the king salmon runs have been so dismal. This team is directed to issue a report and make recommendations this fall. I look forward to reviewing this report and making it available to my constituents. It is my hope that the legislature can enter the next legislative session with a solid plan to address this resource that is so important and closely tied to the families and communities that I represent in the Senate.

Thank you for taking the time to read my Ulu Newsletter. I wish everyone a pleasant summer.

Take care,
Senator Donald Olson

Dear Editor,
GOLOVIN BAY people better wake up. The future is NOW— develop the infrastructure NOW— for transportation roads, etc. Golovin Bay could have a deepwater port to rival ANY in the state and USA. Start NOW. If YOU CAN'T DO IT, find someone who can. Get it STARTED. Inter-organizational squabbling gets NOWHERE FAST. PS: CARL EMMONS, you are RIGHT. It should be REQUIRED READING for village leaders— regarding comments to Nome City Council on July 26, 2012.

A Look at the Present

DUELING LAPTOPS – Cousins Charlie Burrow and Rodger Hughes were in Nome last week tracing their family history at the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. They are cousins of Lucy and John Poling. Their grandfather, Albert Spaeth, spent the winter of 1900 in a tent on Nome's beach. Their mothers returned to Nome in the early 1930s as teachers and met their husbands here. Charlie's parents lived in Candle working for ACS while Rodger's dad, Howard Hughes, was Nome's dentist in the 1930s. Left to right, trading stories are Anne Peterson Whipple, Charlie Burrow, Augie Krutzsch and Rodger Hughes. Fritz, lead dog of the 1925 Serum Run listens in.

THE OLD TOWN STILL LOOKS THE SAME – George Madsen Jr. was eleven years old when his family left Nome in 1951. Over the years, daughter Julie grew so curious about her Dad's intriguing stories about his life in the Gold Rush City that they travelled to Nome last week to relive some of those memories. They found several photos in the Curtis Jacobs Collection at the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum to take back home.

Editorial

Last week the federal government spent big bucks to bring several folks to Nome to have a public informational meeting in our town. It's a fine attempt to keep us informed. The only problem is they failed to tell us they were coming. Apparently only a dozen folks showed up.

How much would it have cost them to run a public notice ad in the newspaper? They could have had a small ad for under $100 and had proof they held the meeting. They are penny-wise and pound-foolish. Democracy does not come on the cheap. When we don't show up at unannounced meetings, they think we don't care (maybe they are right), but we never have a chance to tell them because we don't know about the meeting. Now the feds will likely say, "Why should we go to Nome? They never come to our public meetings."

It is important that government on all levels does their best to keep the public informed. It is also just as important for us to keep after the city, state and federal entities to keep us in the loop. Tyranny feeds on ignorance, and an informed public keeps the lamp of liberty beaming. —N.L.M.—

A Look at the Past: The 1900 Nome Gold Rush

By Laura Samuelson, Director, Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

In the spirit of the 1900 Nome Gold Rush, the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum is pleased to continue "The 1900 Diary of Wilfred A. McDaniel" in the next several issues of The Nome Nugget newspaper.

Wilfred McDaniel was 25 years old when he first landed at Nome in June 1900 in the midst of the largest gold rush in Alaska. Wilfred was a gifted photographer, writer, artist, poet and an amateur dentist. During the eight years he lived in Nome he stop by Nome's Museum located to the west of the BOT.

In the last issue of The Nome Nugget newspaper, the brothers Wilfred and Ed dealt with the tragic death of their fellow miner Ed Rouse, who is still buried in Nome. It's starting to get darker at night as the Mid-night Sun begins to wane. Now it's time for some weather to set in ...

July 29, 1900

Today is Sunday and we are laying off. I made some bread and a pudding today. We will set the boxes and start work in the morning. We everyone at work. He said he was defending a man who was arrested and he was getting all the names of the beach miners. If we are all arrested there'll be a hot time in the old town tomorrow night, my honey.

July 30, 1900

Started as usual this morning. Some soldiers came by but did not notice us. One returned with nine prisoners. We worked out a pit 24 x 1 ft. cleaned up the bedrock. Found a small nugget today. The only one we have seen from the beach. Al Raney came up to camp today. He bought a pumping plant for $200 and will locate next to us.

July 31, 1900

Al staid with us all night. No hard trouble again with our pump. The sea is rough and the surf is full of sea moss. It gets into the pump runner and clogs it up. Ed went to a miner's meeting this afternoon. Lots of talk about the beach. We worked until 9:15 p.m. The water jacket on the engine became clogged with sand and moss so that we had to stop.

August 1, 1900

All the pumping plants are stopped today as there is a rumor that we are all to be arrested today. We took our boxes down and cleaned up. The weather is getting very stormy and the sea is getting rough. We took supper with Al Raney.

August 2, 1900

There is a big storm on now. The sea is rolling high and coming higher up on the beach than I have ever seen lugged his 20-pound Kodak camera from town to beach claim through rugged creeks and mosquito infested tundra, during powerful Bering Sea storms and furious blizzards. All the while he wrote descriptive letters to his parents in California and maintained a diary covering almost every day he lived on the coast west of Nome.

The result of this determined perseverance is the documentation of the lives of successful beach miners in the Nome gold rush era as well as an insight into the Eskimo people who lived at the Penny, Cripple and Sinuk Rivers at that time. Wilfred died at the age of 80 in 1954. However his thoughts, memories and love of Nome are preserved forever as his legacy in the "McDaniel Family Collection" now owned and on exhibit at Nome's Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. If it ever rains, set our boxes and are ready for work tomorrow. A man who said he was a lawyer stopped here and said that the marshall told him that the soldiers were coming up the beach and arrest

The storm has gone down. Several launches and one schooner were wrecked during the gale. New arrests were made today. We are going to see the N.Y. Co. again tomorrow and try and make an arrangement so that we can work.

Nome men injured in house fire, one medivaced to Seattle

By Diana Haecker

A fire at 105 E. Kings Way in Nome injured two men and burned down the arctic entry of the residence.

Jerry Steiger with the Nome Volunteer Fire Department said that the fire was called in at 6:05 a.m. on Saturday, July 28. When NVFD fire engines arrived, they found the entrance burning and a man on the roof.

"One person had escaped through an upstairs window to the roof, and we rescued that person from the roof," Steiger said. According to a police report, the person was Walter Rose, 50. As the firefighters prepared for the roof rescue, they worked on extinguishing the fire in the arctic entrance way. Once the flames were extinguished, they made entry and found a second victim, Conrad Klemzak, 54, on the floor, overcome by heat and the smoke.

Nome Ambulance Department volunteers took Klemzak and Rose to the Norton Sound Regional hospital for treatment of burns and smoke inhalation.

NPD reports that Klemzak was medivaced to Seattle for treatment of significant and critical injuries. His last condition report was critical.

Steiger said that it was a relatively small, contained fire, but it produced a fair amount of heat and smoke. By 7:30 a.m., the fire was extinguished.

The cause of the fire is still under investigation, said Steiger. "We ruled out electrical causes," Steiger said.

The state fire marshal came to Nome and is investigating the fire.

"He took some evidence with him for further investigation and testing," Steiger said.

ON LISTENING TOUR— FCC officials Irene Flannery and Geoffrey Blackwell toured Northwest Alaska including Nome to get a handle on problems that stand in the way of expanding communications service in rural Alaska.

and Norton Sound Health Corporation have fast speeds, but the villages stay in poverty if they don't get faster services. Can't we let the public use their infrastructure?" asked Stimpfle. Well, they can't share the services with the public, Robin Johnson of Nome Public Schools said, but it would be possible to open an access point. Stimpfle brought up the importance new social media plays in village life. "I have seen how Facebook can make a difference and save a suicidal kid's life. What a difference Internet service could make! But there are only so many jobs in Teller and many cannot afford to pay for Internet access." Tom Gray chimed in, saying that his wife counsels kids on Facebook. "I know for a fact that Facebook has stopped people from killing themselves," Gray said.

Ken Hughes with Hughes.net brought a different perspective to the table and said that the FCC should do away with many regulations that restrict private enterprise. The problems of slow speed and expensive service are compounded by limited choice in providers.

In the Norton Sound and Bering Strait regions, only GCI, TelAlaska, Starband and Hughes.net provide Internet service. The FCC says Alaska Communications accepted nearly $4.2 million to increase broadband access in Alaska. Alaska Communications must complete two-thirds of its new broadband commitments within two years, and the remainder by the third year.

Another comment was that Alaska Natives could sell their art online, if they could afford to pay top dollars for the slow service they're getting.

Tom Gray, speaking of his experience as a hunting guide, told the commissioners that it takes 30 minutes to download the Anchorage Daily News, and when he tried to skype with a client, it took his conversation partner half an hour to hear Gray's voice.

Blackwell said that they don't need to be convinced that rural Alaska wants faster and more reliable Internet service. But he needs to hear specific comment from tribal entities on proposals, such as turning the Lifeline service to the internet.

Lifeline is a universal service providing telephone access to low-income residents for $1 a month. "We analyse the feasibility in real life, and we are interested to see if there is a $1 per month program that would be effective, but we do need to build the record. So, yes, we are looking at how to create a low-income program for broadband services," Blackwell said. "It's not enough to hear it, but we need reason and analysis and responses. The greatest challenge I have is building the record," Blackwell explained.

The FCC officials also visited Kawerak, NSHC, met with city officials, the Nome Police Chief and the Fire chief.

small children, comforted each other and left the courthouse in tears. They had no immediate comment.

In their investigation, police found a camera that had recorded two videos the night of the murder. One showed Pushruk relaxing with a beer and texting on her phone, with nothing visibly amiss. The other video showed Oquilluk in the home with blood on his face as he played his guitar.

For the Pushruk family of Teller, this is the second violent death at the hands of another. About five years ago, Patrick "Rudy" Pushruk was beaten to death in Teller. Eli Dickson pleaded guilty to manslaughter in that death. His sentence was 16 years with five suspended.

Esch made sure that Oquilluk understood the consequences of a guilty plea. The judge then accepted the guilty plea. In doing so, he told Oquilluk he could draw a sentence of 99 years on a conviction of second-degree murder as an unclassified felony, but that in this case, it would be capped at 30 years.

NovaGold shares plunge after Barrick decides to put Donlin Creek mine on ice

By Diana Haecker

NovaGold Resources, former owner of the Rock Creek mine and still owner of Alaska Gold Co. took a huge hit at the stock market last week, seeing its shares plunge 25 percent down to a historic low of $4.20 per share. The loss came at the heels of Barrick Gold's announcement that they will not go into construction mode at Donlin Creek at this time. Barrick Gold and NovaGold are 50/50 partners in the Donlin Gold LLC. The Barrick second quarter report states that Donlin Gold currently doesn't meet Barrick's investment criteria. The report says that under Barrick's disciplined capital allocation framework, they will not make the decision to construct at this time. The reason: too expensive to build. However, the Barrick report also says that the project holds "valuable long-term opportunities" and that they would go forward with permitting activities. Last Thursday, the first permit applications were handed in at the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources.

While gold production giant Barrick still has other projects in production, the Canadian NovaGold Resources Inc. put all its eggs in one basket: Donlin Creek. Financial commentator Rich Duprey with the Motley Fool report at the Daily Finance website wrote, "It wasn't so simple as a dour outlook that sank NovaGold Resources, but rather its whole reason for existence is called into question."

NovaGold sold its idle Rock

Creek mine in Nome to Bering Straits Native Corporation, pending contractual provisions dealing with the mine's reclamation. It sold more than 11,000 acres of patented mining claims around Nome to Nome Gold Alaska, a new mining company also based in Canada. NovaGold negotiates with BSNC about the sale of the Alaska Gold Company, based in Nome. NovaGold also put its 50 percent share of the Galore Creek project on the market. In addition to the shedding of high-cost projects, NovaGold undertook some restructuring, spun off NovaCopper and placed former CEO and president of NovaGold Rick van Nieuwenhuysse at the helm of NovaCopper. Van Nieuwenhuysse was replaced by former Barrick Gold top executive, Greg Lang.

NovaGold execs reasoned that they want to concentrate all their efforts on Donlin Creek, and that's why, for example, Rock Creek didn't fit in their portfolio anymore. Getting a taste of the disappointment that such a decision brings, NovaGold felt the pain at the stock market immediately after Barrick's announcement last week.

Developing Donlin Creek poses more hurdles than it took to build the mine at Rock Creek. There is no road access to Donlin, no power plant anywhere near the proposed mining site, and the last cost estimate put the price tag at $6 billion to develop the mine. This would include construction of a $1 billion gas line from Cook Inlet to Donlin Creek, across the Alaska Range, with sections along the historic Iditarod trail. For good public relations, Donlin Gold LLC became one of the primary sponsors of the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog race last year.

In a press release, NovaGold responded to Barrick's decision by saying that it is reasonable for Barrick not to be making a construction decision on this new, large-scale project at this time. "NovaGold similarly is not making such a decision. The timeline of the permitting process means the co-owners have approximately four years to make any major decision on the Project." Other than investors having lost a whole lot of money — John Paulson's hedge fund owned 13 percent of NG stocks, and lost $64 million in one day — NovaGold maintains that Barrick Gold's announcement does not represent any change in the project status or direction for the next four years.

"With the annual expenditures at Donlin Gold through the permitting process expected to be a modest $40 million on a 100 percent basis over several years, the co-owners of the project have an incredible opportunity to optimize capital and operating costs and yet take full advantage of Donlin Gold's significant leverage to the price of gold in an environment of what the company strongly believes is a secular bull market in gold," Greg Lang said in a press release.

The Nome Nugget contacted NovaGold for comment, but has not received a response by publication deadline.

pump the sludge out of the tank. "We realized that it was more than we can handle," said Dunham. By then he put water conservation measures in effect because the problem got worse when more water entered the system. "It never backed up into the facility," Dunham said.

With the kitchen using most of the water during the day, meals got restricted to hot breakfast and dinner, with a sack meal for lunch. Showers could only be used between 7 p.m. and 9:45 p.m. And after 10 p.m., laundry was done. "The reason was to control the water surges," said Dunham.

By July 23, the problem got worse. Now Dunham was operating under time pressure to solve in a few days what has never been done before in Alaska. For the first time in Alaska prison history, a septic failed and the entire facility was facing evacuation if the problem wasn't solved in four days' time. On top of that the City's pump truck brought in to pump the waste off the top in the tank had a mechanical and was not available. "By the time the contractor arrived, the tank was not empty enough to lower anybody in. When we first removed the hatch, it was full to the top," Dunham said.

That Monday, Dunham had to put the facility into water restriction mode. At 8 a.m., the water was turned off. The kitchen staff had baked 400 loaves of bread in preparation to feed sack meals only for the next few days. Water was only turned on every four hours to flush toilets and for prisoners to perform basic hygiene. The 91 prisoners were given two bottles of water that they were supposed to refill when the water was turned on in the four-hour intervals. Neither showers nor laundry were allowed. To lessen the load, 37 prisoners were shipped out to other facilities.

As local septic specialists were in over their heads, the Dept. of Corrections authorized that Dunham draw up a special contract for a Palmer contractor to come to Nome and fix the problem. But there was no easy solution to it. The tank measures 30 feet, is 10 feet high and round. The first 20 feet are to separate the solids from the liquid and at 20 feet is a baffle system to hold back the solids. The entire tank was backed up and pushed everything out to the leech field. The access hatch is at five feet, leaving another 15 feet of solids that the pump truck couldn't get to.

The Palmer experts were to access the tank, break up the solids and get it toward the hatch so that it can get pumped out. When the contractor came with one safety officer and a supervisor, the supervisor wouldn't let his worker inside the tank — that's how bad it was. The goal of cleaning was not accomplished, but some of the waste was pumped out to leave four feet of sludge in the tank. The problem is not solved for good, but at least it will get the prison over the winter, Dunham said.

The replacement of the 1985 installed septic system has been a capital funds project for several years, but had been postponed because a connected project, the replacement of an utilidor between the boiler room and the facility had cost overruns. No additional state funds were appropriated to the $3 million project. Next summer, the prison will get a new septic system consisting of two 8,000-gallon tanks, a grinder and a new lift station. This summer, the leech field will be excavated.

"This was the first time a prison in the state had to deal with this," Dunham said. "When it was all over, I thanked the prisoners for their understanding. They did an excellent job coping with this." But, yes, Dunham said, tensions did start to rise. "It was a stressful time for staff and prisoners."

Man found dead on West Beach

Nome Police and Nome Ambulance Dept. volunteers were called out on Friday, July 27 at 9:20 p.m. to a camp on West Beach to respond to a report of an unconscious person. They found Thomas Stamps, 71, of Nome dead.

The authorities don't suspect foul play. The State Medical examiner was notified and the body taken to the morgue.

THE DOCK WALK

By Diana Haecker

Weatherwise, last week was nasty. Record-breaking rainfall and stormy conditions kept gold miners from working, and things got “cozy” inside the harbor as all kinds of boats and vessels snuggled up next to each other. In her weekly update to The Nome Nugget, Harbormaster Joy Baker says that Port of Nome staff managed to stack vessels nicely inside the harbor and that everybody had adequate shelter from the storm.

Here is who came and went from the Nome Port and small boat harbor: On Monday, two fuel lighter barges were tucked in the harbor as the storm approached. The research vessel Norseman II left that morning.

On Tuesday, the U.S. Coast Guard vessel Sycamore arrived and anchored offshore. The three sailboats that have been sitting inside the small boat harbor were joined by a fourth sailboat, also trying to sail the Northwest Passage.

On Wednesday not much happened as the Sycamore was still anchored outside, and the two fuel lighter barges were still tucked in at the small boat harbor.

On Thursday, the Orestina, a tanker running under Gibraltar flag with a Russian crew, came into the Port to offload fuel for Bonanza Fuel. A landing craft running village cargo and the two lighter fuel barges were still in the harbor, waiting for better weather.

On Friday, a landing craft arrived to move village cargo.

On Saturday, a gravel barge came in. This time, it didn't take on gravel for export, but it delivered armor stone for the Snake River bridge replacement from southwest Alaska. NSEDC's vessels, the Egavik and the Inaliq are constantly making runs between Nome and east Norton Sound to deliver bait and fish to the Norton Sound Seafood Products plant.

A 150-foot landing craft called the Polarbear showed up on Saturday. The Polarbear is going to be the platform to conduct core drilling for Denali Drilling, hired on by the South African gold company Aurumar, which scored several large tract leases in the DNR offshore lease auction last September.

Also on Saturday, the 417-foot long tanker Moor – also under Russian flag – anchored offshore to lighter fuel for Nome Joint Utilities.

The Korean icebreaker Araon arrived in Nome to drop off researchers, to get their marine inspection taking care of and gearing up for the next voyage.

The Alaska Logistics landing craft Kaktovik, of fame as the vessel that last year was tossed on the rocks inside the port and leaked some oil, is back in business and has been delivering village freight throughout this summer.

Baker said that the number of vessels hiding from the weeklong storm gave port staff a good idea how to go stack them up for next time – when there is another storm and even more boats trying to run for shelter. “We just squeezed them in and the next time we have to do it, we'll need to stack up and squeeze in even more boats,” Baker said.

On Monday morning, the skies cleared and the four sailboats left Nome onward with their quest to navigate the Northwest Passage.

Record breaking rain swamps Nome

By Diana Haecker

Nome was on top of the list in terms of water that poured down last week. According to the National Weather Service in Nome, 4.72 inches of rain came down starting on Tuesday, July 24, making it the greatest seven-day total ever observed in Nome. Last week rivaled that of a torrid rainfall in the autumn of 1935 that produced 5.25 inches of rain in seven days.

On the days of July 25 and 28, the rain broke standing records. The pouring rain on Saturday broke a 101-year old record set in 1911.

In and around Nome, the rivers swelled immensely, and Alaska

Dept. of Fish and Game officials report that they suspended fish counting at the Kwiniuk River, the Niukluk River and the Pilgrim River due to high and turbid water.

The Nome, Snake and Eldorado fish weirs are also not working because of the high water.

This July with its 5.93 inches of rain will go into the record books as the third-wettest July on record, behind the wettest July in 1920 with 8.43 inches and 1922 with 6.2 inches.

Up until last week, the total precipitation for this year was 4.37 inches.

FLOODED— The Snake River weir was not operational due to high water. A record rainfall brought more than five inches of precipitation to Nome and the region. In northern Norton Sound, only Glacial Lake weir is still able to function and count at this time.

Rain hampers fish counting efforts

The Fish Report by Jim Menard, ADF&G Nome

The rains this past week knocked out the Eldorado, Nome and Snake River weirs early Thursday morning, July 26 and the Niukluk River tower crew has been unable to count since Thursday afternoon because of high and murky water. The newer model floating weirs at Pilgrim and Unalakleet Rivers are able to handle greater water flows and are still operational as is the weir at the outlet of Glacial Lake.

Norton Sound commercial salmon harvest to date is 203,000 pinks, 52,000 chums, 70 sockeyes, and 2,200 silvers. The pink salmon harvest is the best since 1998. Pink directed fishing periods have ended, but fishing for chums continues and silver catch numbers are increasing with each fishing period.

A mid-season assessment shows the king run was weak, the chum run was below average to average and the pink run was below average for an even-numbered year. A real outlier seen this year was Kwiniuk River where the chum escapement was the worst in the 48 years of tower counts.

Weather has kept most crab fishermen in the harbor since early this week and harvest levels are naturally falling off from the 2011 pace because there has been little harvest this week due to weather.

Crab:

This year's quota is 465,450 pounds and through the morning of July 28, commercial crab permit holders are halfway to the quota with 235,000 pounds harvested. There are 28 permit holders registered with 26 making deliveries so far this season.

Salmon:

Unalakleet and Shaktoolik Subdistrict

In Unalakleet, the commercial harvest to date is 23,345 chums, 53,268 pinks, 47 sockeyes and 1,711 silvers. The chum harvest ranks 5th highest in 20 years and the pink harvest is the best since 1998.

In Shaktoolik, the commercial harvest to date is 18,260 chums, 19,400 pinks, 25 sockeyes and 330 silvers. The chum harvest ranks 4th highest in 20 years and the pink harvest is the best since 2000.

Norton Bay Subdistrict

Commercial harvest to date is 4,830 chums, 46,760 pinks and 70 silvers. The chum harvest ranks 3rd highest in 20 years and the pink harvest is a record.

Elim Subdistrict

Commercial harvest to date is 2,140 chums, 52,725 pinks and 10 silvers. The pink harvest is the best since 1998.

Golovin Subdistrict

No commercial fishing periods are scheduled at this time.

Commercial harvest to date is 3,668 chums, 31,225 pinks and 47 silvers. The pink harvest is the best since 1998.

Nome Subdistrict

The department has switched to silver salmon management. High water knocked out all counting weirs in the subdistrict, except for Glacial weir. Following Wednesday's rainfall the weirs started to fall like dominos with Eldorado, Nome and Snake opened up by rising water in the early morning hours of Thursday.

Nome Subdistrict aerial surveys were completed just in time and combined with weir counts the estimated escapement of 50,000 chum salmon ranks it 5th highest in the last 10 years and exceeds the escapement goal range of 23,000 to 35,000 chum salmon.

Summercise brings out kids in record numbers

By Diana Haecker

It's not summer in Nome until Summercise starts in mid-June, and it's a sad affair when session two wraps up by the end of July. Tears are flowing as kids bid their summercise instructors farewell and go home with the message of healthy living, daily exercise and staying tobacco-free.

Summercise, in its 13th year, is a program implemented by the CAMP department of Norton Sound Health Corporation. “Our focus is to prevent diabetes through introducing healthy eating habits and exercise,” said Kendra Baggett, Summercise director with CAMP. Children get to choose from several classes ranging from cooking, traditional living and Native Youth Olympic disciplines to hiphop dancing, cheerleading, hiking, biking, flag football and even yoga.

This summer, 198 children from five to 13 years old participated — that is up from 163 kids last summer. Over the years, the program has been growing and gained wide support among community members. The City of Nome grants the use of the Rec Center and staff time to the two summer sessions. The CAMP department hired eight interns from nutrition schools nationwide and brought them to Nome to teach Summercise as well as help Norton Sound with its diabetes prevention programs such as Step-by-step. Community volunteers also chip in and this year, three National Park Service employees took kids out on hikes and taught them about archeological digs in the area. Nome Eskimo Community volunteers also helped out and taught NYO classes along with Kaitlyn Tozier and traditional living cooking classes. Also, 10 assistants from Nome were hired to tame the hordes and assist the instructors. The fun everybody had was apparent in last Wednesday's final Summercise performance. The five- and six-year olds, marching in behind an instructor carrying the Olympic torch, performed a hiphop inspired dance, rapping about healthy foods and delivering smashing air-guitar performances. Next came a cheerleading performance, a yoga performance and a hiphop dance show.

Baggett said that the Summercise program is giving the children something to do when school is not in session and they are learning new things. “It gets them out there to play instead of sitting around and watching TV,” Baggett said. In addition, the cooking classes introduce some children to new and healthy foods. “My ‘favorite’ comment was from a kid who said: ‘I don't like this kind of salad,’” said Baggett. They were preparing fresh vegetable salad. When asked what other kind of salad the child likes, the response was, “Pasta salad.” With this anecdotal example, Baggett brings home the point that eating fresh is sometimes an acquired taste and that Summercise is a powerful weapon in the arsenal to fight childhood obesity.

Twenty-nine runners and bikers compete in rainy Dexter Challenge

Photos and story by Diana Haecker

Wind-driven rain and chilly temperatures couldn't keep hardy Nome runners and bikers from participating in the Wyatt Earp Dexter Challenge, held last Saturday. The race took the 18 runners, eight men and 10 women, eight miles from Anvil City Square over the Dexter Pass to Dexter. The bikers, eight men and three women, also started from the heart of Nome, but took a different course, racing down Front Street, taking a left at the Beam Road and going to Dexter the long way, or 12 miles.

The fireweed in bloom alongside the roads and the bright gear worn by competitors were the only dots of color on this otherwise bleak and gray Saturday. But the weather didn't dampen the racer's and supporter's spirits.

First to cross the finish line was Benjamin Head on the bike, in a time of 41 minutes and 16 seconds. He went on to run uphill towards the Dexter pass to meet wife Amanda who competed in the runner's division. The first runner to finish was Levi Daugherty in a time of 51 minutes and 14 seconds. The first female runner was Crystal Tobuk, finishing the race in 56 minutes and 28 seconds. The first female biker was Jane Lando. A few bikers opted to use their snowbikes, wheeling their fat tires over the soft gravel roads in respectable times.

The CAMP Department of Norton Sound Health Corporation sponsored the race.

Tobuk brings marathon running to Nome

By Bob Lawrence, MD

Runners in the Norton Sound region will have the opportunity to participate in a full or half marathon this weekend, thanks to the efforts of one local running enthusiast.

Crystal Tobuk, the sponsor and organizer of the Cape Nome Half and Full Marathon, states this will be her first marathon. Tobuk says she decided to host a marathon because it is something she has always wanted to do, but as a mom and small business owner, she found it hard to travel out of Nome to run a marathon.

Tobuk believes hosting the marathon will be a good way to get people who do run to run farther and those who do not yet run to start running.

Many people have taken up the challenge to prepare for this event, and in doing so will join the hundreds of thousands of people who will run a marathon this year. Over the last decade the number of Americans who run a marathon or half-marathon has risen from 299,000 a year to nearly 500,000 people per year nation-wide.

According to Tobuk, many people have expressed an interest in participating, and even more have volunteered to provide race support with water, sports drinks, and gel packs.

The marathon route stretches from East End Park in Nome to Cape Nome and back, a total of 26.2 miles. Half-marathoners will run from Cape Nome back to East End Park, a total of 13.1 miles.

Tobuk is a personal trainer. Though some trainers encourage running for a full year without injury before training for a marathon, Tobuk is less restrictive. "Once you can run three mile runs three times per week for three to four months, you are ready to train for a marathon."

Runners may register for the Cape Nome Marathon at www.aktrainer.com. The race is scheduled to begin at 10 a.m. on Saturday, August 4th.

Even if it is too late to compete in the marathon, runners have other opportunities to participate in races. Many communities in the Norton Sound region host races throughout the year appropriate for runners and athletes of all ages and experience levels. It is never too late to pick a race and begin training, even if the goal is simply finishing.

Some people are fearful that endurance sports will cause an injury. Knee pain, hip pain, ankle pain and plantar fasciitis are the most common injuries for distance runners.

The key to injury-free training is a gradual increase in distance over several months while paying attention to nutrition, footwear, and proper stretching. According to Tobuk, "It is so important to stretch after running."

Sports injuries are rarely debilitating. Most sports medicine doctors recognize that the health benefits of running far outweigh the risk of a joint or muscle injury. Most doctors would much prefer to have a patient call because he or she is having knee pain with running, than to get the call that a patient is having a pain in the chest resulting from an inactive lifestyle.

Endurance activity is known to improve brain function and may provide protection against Alzheimer's disease. Scientists have measured several chemicals released during exercise that have an effect on the brain similar to pain killers and anti-anxiety medications.

The feeling experienced when these chemicals are released is called "the runner's high." It explains why some people become dependent on running. But unlike harmful addictions that cause life to fall apart, endurance training supports good health and in many ways helps life come together.

Running may not be the ideal sport for everyone. But the body was meant to move. Activity of some form is an important part of being healthy. As Tobuk says, "Lift. Run. Play. Make the gym your playground."

Obituaries

Denise Audrey Amarok Oliver Okleasik

Denise was born in Nome Alaska on May 10, 1973. Denise, precious daughter of Curt and Carol Oliver, sister to Heidi and Jimmy, Donald and Burlene, Matthew and Jesse, wife of Buddy Okleasik and mother to Jordan, Ivory, Zoe, Gracie and Heidi, left us unexpectedly on May 18, 2012 in Golovin.

Denise loved her family with all her heart. Always greeting with a hug and her beautiful smile and leaving with the words, "I Love You." Her children were her pride and joy, speaking of each one's character and talents with a smile and a mother's pride beaming on her face.

Denise had so many talents. She loved to bake and was known for her pies. Like her mom, she was an avid reader. She took great pride in her home and put her special touch in every room of the house and at camp, her favorite place to be. Denise loved and lived a subsistence lifestyle, loving to pick berries and put away fish, among other activities.

Denise's heart was filled with happiness, love and compassion. She worked with and became friends with people suffering from addiction and was able to understand their struggles.

Denise will be missed dearly. Her infectious laugh and unconditional love will stay with us forever in our memories. God has taken another Angel to help watch over and guide us all. Her time with us was all too short, but Denise will always remain in our hearts and will never be forgotten.

Jerry Landgrebe
*“Strength and courage aren’t always measured in medals and victories. They are measured in the struggles they overcome.
The strongest people aren’t always the people who win, but the people who don’t give up.”*

Jerry Landgrebe

Jerry didn’t give up but lost the battle with cancer on June 29, 2012 in Providence Hospital, Anchorage, Alaska.

Born March 1941 to Ruth (Bertch) and Arnold Landgrebe, he was the “#1 son” of four children. A free spirit and independent thinker, Jerry loved his 71 years to the fullest, the result of hard work and his zest for life and new adventure.

As a young man, Jerry worked at the Dakota Zoo in Bismarck, North Dakota where he helped to bring an Alaskan Kodiak cub to the zoo, which just may have planted to seed that got him to Alaska.

Pioneering in the ‘60s, Jerry worked in the Prudhoe Bay area and homesteaded while building a log cabin in the Brooks Range where he came to know and respect the Native people. Flying his cub over the beautiful landscape of Alaska only reinforced his admiration and commitment to the land.

Whether “Red” or one of the “Three Hairy Brothers,” Jerry’s integrity, work ethic and sense of humor gained him many loyal and trusted friends both in Nome and Fairbanks where he lived.

Mining gold from the bottom of the sea is a challenge, but Jerry was up to the challenge and so began the chapter of his life, one that resulted in a segment on the History Channel highlighting that adventure.

Jerry subscribed to the writing and teaching of Thomas Jefferson and admired the scientific minds, research and thinking of Jane Goodall, Carl Sagan and those writers found in the pages of Smithsonian and National Geographic. While in North Dakota earlier this year, Jerry developed a keen interest in the exploits of Lewis and Clark and spent time visiting points of interest and learning all he could about these early explorers.

Albert Einstein said, “If something is in me which can be called religious, then it is the unbounded admiration for the structure of the world as our science can reveal it.” That sums Jerry’s belief. He asked that a friend scatter his ashes over the land. So when the aurora borealis dances on the horizon or wolves run wild with the caribou, let it be known that this special mountain is a better place because it cradles the remains of a true Alaskan pioneer who loved the land, its animals and her people.

Jerry is survived by two brothers, Lowell and Fred, a sister, Linda, and brother-in-law, Lannon, two nieces and nephews: Madeline, Mara, Magnus, Cordelia, Rocco and Deuce, whom he entrusted his estate to the “6 Pack Trust” in hopes of furthering their educations. This is Jerry’s legacy to the future. He is also survived by true and good friends, cousins, aunts, uncles and an aunt, Esther, who has always held a special spot in Jerry’s heart.

CHIEF'S NOTES:

Public Safety has many facets and angles that have to be covered. The City of Nome is fortunate that not only does it have a dedicated group of public safety professionals to serve the community, but it also is a community that cares about the welfare of our people. But in order to promote a safe and secure community, we all must realize that public safety begins with individual safety and that your individual safety habits have a large impact on whether you or your loved ones become the victim of unfortunate circumstances.

Individual safety begins with making good choices such as:

Don't drink and drive;

Always go out with friends and have a sober person look after the group and makes sure everyone gets home safe;

Don't go to the homes of 'strangers' to party or accept drinks from people that you don't know;

Always know your limits and don't exceed them (in everything);

Don't hang out in places where there is an increased risk of injury or victimization;

Look out for your friends and call for help if you see something that doesn't look right;

Though alcohol is a big concern, exercise personal safety by wearing reflective clothing; wearing floatation when around water; and walk facing traffic so you can see what's coming;

Take the time to check your smoke alarms and make sure that people are not smoking in your house (particularly if drinking);

Watch out for wild animals and don't approach any domestic animals without the permission of the owner;

Report any situation that makes you feel unsafe. It's always better to let us know what's going on and prevent an event, then to see what happens;

Wear a helmet if you're on an ATV and don't have people riding as passengers unless the machine is designed to carry passengers; and Carry survival gear if you're going into the backcountry and file a trip plan so we know where to look if you are overdue.

It's very easy to think that nothing bad will ever happen, but we can all decrease the risk of injury or victimization by making sound safety choices.

And please report any suspicious situation to the Nome Police at 443-5262. Or if you have information about a crime, you can call us at 443-5262 or email us at nomepolice@hotmail.com

Rain drives Summerfest inside

By Diana Haecker

Torrential rain poured down for the entire week, and the organizers of the Summerfest and talent competition had to resort to plan B, bringing the fest inside the Rec Center. The Summerfest is an annual affair to showcase Nome's talented teens and give them the opportunity to show their talents in front of a larger crowd.

The sponsors, 907 Network Services and Bush907.com, CHARR, the Nome Community Center, the City of Nome Parks and Recreation Department and the Youth Education Services Agency set up two bounce houses, had a dunk tank courtesy of Arctic Chiropractic, booths with Summerfest-themed Tundra T-shirts, CAMP's message of eating healthy fruit and vegetables, the Nome Rotarians selling bath towels and hamburgers, as well as National Park Service employees doing face paintings. After a performance by the Usual Suspects, Nome rapper Half-smoked aka Loren Sands and his wife, Lucille, with son Kasen Evans took to the stage.

Then it was time to put the Youth in the Spotlight, as the motto of this year's Summerfest was called, and the talent competition started. The contest was open for ages 12 through 24, and only three “groups” decided to perform. The winner was Tammy Treend, 23, accompanied on the guitar; second was a group of Summercise interns Molly Benrud, Olivia Myers, Hannah Cory, Kim Ayek and Callie Kettner, and third place went to Miranda Murphy.
