Alaska Legislature confirms commissioners

JUNEAU – On May 9, the Alaska State Legislature has confirmed all of Governor Mike Dunleavy's appointees to lead state departments. Commissioner Jason Brune of the Department of Environmental Conservation was confirmed unanimously to be the Lt. Governor's successor.

The confirmed commissioners are:

Commissioner Jen Winkelman, Department of Corrections

Commissioner Jen Winkelman started with the Department of Corrections in 2001. She has served as a Probation/Parole Officer in various capacities with the Division of Pre-trial, Probation, and Parole (DP3) and the Division of Institutions in Fairbanks, Palmer, and Juneau. Most recently, she was the Director of DP3. Born and raised in Fairbanks, she has a bachelor's degree in justice from the University of Alaska, Fairbanks. She previously served on the Fairbanks and Juneau reentry coalitions and the Interstate Commission for Adult Offender Supervision. She serves on the Governor's Council for Homelessness and the Alaska Police Standards Council.

Commissioner Heidi Hedberg, Department of Health

Commissioner Heidi Hedberg has been with the state since 2009, serving in various capacities within the Division of Public Health, Department of Health, and most recently, as the Director for the Division of Public Health. She holds a Bachelor of Science degree from Alaska Pacific University. She moved to the state in 1995 from Seattle, Washington. Prior to her state service, she worked with various non-profit organizations for twelve years. She also chairs the Governor's Advisory Council on Opioid Remediation and serves on the Governor's Council on Homelessness and State Emergency Response Commission.

Commissioner John Boyle, Department of Natural Resources

Commissioner John Boyle moved to Alaska in 2010 after graduating from law school to serve a judicial clerkship in Fairbanks. Following the conclusion of the clerkship, he moved to Utqiagvik to work as an Assistant Borough Attorney and later Chief Advisor to the Mayor and Director of the North Slope Borough's Government and External Affairs department. In 2016 he worked for BP as their Director of Government Affairs before joining Oil Search (now Santos) as Government Affairs Manager. He earned a Juris Doctorate from J. Ruben Clark Law School at

Alaska Senate passes bill banning use of firefighting foams containing 'forever chemicals'

By Yereth Rosen, Alaska Beacon

The Alaska Senate on Monday unanimously approved a bill that would mandate an end to the use of firefighting foams containing the long-lasting and health-damaging compounds known as "forever chemicals."

Senate Bill 67 requires use of PFAS-containing foams end on Jan. 1, unless otherwise required by federal law. The foams are generally used in airport fire departments, and contamination of communities around the nation and in Alaska has often been linked to airports.

The bill is aimed at stopping the spread of compounds that are "bad for people at incredibly small concentrations," the bill's sponsor, Sen. Jesse Kiehl, D-Juneau, said in floor remarks.

The bill does not address all the groups work with clients with mental health, substance use disorder, transitional housing, and workforce development issues. He has a bachelor's degree in psychology from Northwestern University and a Master of Science in Public Health from Johns Hopkins University.

Commissioner Kim Kovol, Department of Family and Community Services

Commissioner Kim Kovol has over 25 years of experience in the private sector in executive leadership, management, operating licensed childcare facilities, organizational development, restructuring logistics, and working in the human and social services realm with youth and adults. Prior to being appointed commissioner, Commissioner Kovol was Special Assistant to Governor Dunleavy with a social services portfolio focusing on Domestic Violence, Sexual Assault, Missing and Murdered Indigenous Persons, Human and Sex Trafficking, Homelessness, Foster care, Early Childcare, Eldercare, Opioids / Fentanyl, and Suicide Prevention. Commissioner Kovol has a bachelor's degree in liberal arts and studies (K-8 Education) from San Diego State University and a Master of Social Work from the University of Alaska Anchorage.

problems created by PFAS contamination, but it does work to keep things from getting worse, Kiehl said.

"This isn't a cleanup bill. This is a no-new-spills bill," he said.

For airport safety, Kiehl said, there are firefighting foams now available and proved to be effective that do not contain PFAS compounds. However, that may not be the case for oil facilities, he said. For that reason, the bill delays an effective date for curtailment of PFAS-containing foams by oil facilities, such as the Trans-Alaska Pipeline System terminal in Valdez, until the state fire marshal makes a determination that alternatives are suitable.

The expected cost of the bill is $2.55 million in capital expenditures, plus $185,000 in operating expenses in the first fiscal year, diminishing to $160,000 in operating expenses by the fourth fiscal year and nothing after that, according to the fiscal note submitted by the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities.

Part of that cost comes from the bill's requirement that the state collect for proper disposal up to 40 gallons a year of PFAS foams, Kiehl said. That is a tiny quantity for a major facility like the Juneau airport, but it is significant for more than 130 small communities, most of them rural, with volunteer fire departments that do not have the wherewithal to send their accumulated foams to appropriate hazardous waste sites, he said.

Many of those communities have PFAS foams in what are known as Code Red kits, portable firefighting units sent to them by the state about 20 years ago. Those foams are now at risk of spilling or leaking or otherwise spreading in those communities, Kiehl said.

"If we were not to take back those foams and dispose of them properly, the cost of cleanup would choke a horse. Certainly, it makes this fiscal note look like pennies," he said.

The Senate bill now moves to the House for consideration. Meanwhile, a House version, House Bill 166, passed out of the House Labor and Commerce Committee on Friday.

Per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances, collectively known as PFAS, have been used since the 1950s in a variety of consumer and industrial products. They have been linked to cancers, fetal abnormalities, reproductive problems, metabolic disorders and other health ills, according to the National Institute of Environmental Health Science. However, they have become ubiquitous in the environment. One national study found them in the blood of 97 percent of the people tested. Another study, by Alaska Community Action on Toxics, found varying levels in several widely used Alaska waterways in Anchorage and Fairbanks. PFAS substances are notable for being extremely difficult to break down; they do not degrade in the environment.

Both the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation and the federal Environmental Protection Agency have plans to prevent further spread of PFAS substances into the environment or to try to remove them. The EPA in March proposed some new federal drinking water standards for PFAS, and the Alaska DEC, which is coordinating with federal regulators, has a state PFAS action plan that includes cleanup standards for contaminated sites.

She wanted to spend a few years in South Korea, Japan, and London to learn about their cuisines so she could open a take-out restaurant in Gambell. She also wanted to start a cooperative business that works for the benefit of the people, without a sole owner, where profit goes to operations and employees. Another venture in her goals was to build a greenhouse to grow vegetables and local plants like greens, roots, berries, and medicinal herbs for local people to benefit from.

Deborah loved her dog, Little Bear, so much, and had more love to spare. She wanted to open an animal sanctuary to rehabilitate abandoned pets. Little Bear lives on today, and like Deborah, is the sweetest around and learned so many tricks from her.

She really enjoyed The Dream SMP, a way of storytelling through Minecraft because she wants everyone, even adults, to have play and fun.

Deborah was skilled at this; even through hardships in her most difficult time she radiated positivity, sincerity, and love.

Deborah's mother June took her traveling across Alaska and out of state before she started school. Later, when the opportunity arose, she went to Christian Youth gatherings in Palmer and to other youth activities around the state.

She loved her family and friends. She especially loved her grandparents who took her camping and told her stories to instill within her important life values.

On June 2, 2016 Deborah was visiting a friend, preparing for her friend's wedding. She was shot by an individual who was drunk downstairs at an apartment party. Against all odds, she survived, but became paraplegic. She forgave the individual who shot her completely and unconditionally in court, without hesitation. Despite becoming disabled and facing tremendous pain and suffering, she told that individual "I hope one day that I can meet you as a friend and that we can laugh about it together. And just so you know, I forgive you, and I hope that life becomes better for you."

During the last seven years of her life while she was paraplegic, she got to know the Lord deeply and intimately and continued to grow with Him. God expressed His love, joy, generosity, forgiveness, humility, and peace through her. Even though she was suffering chronic pain, she was always loving and friendly to people she talked with, whether in person or not.

She wanted to write a song then sing it to the youth. She was going to use different musical instruments, with both loud and soft rhythms- and crescendo using Yupik drums to aid in spiritual war and dance.

One of her many wise quotes she shared on April 11: "When Death comes, Life begins again."

Deborah never gave up on a happy life for herself and for those around her. To honor her, use this experience to make a newer happier life for yourself, too.
