RETIREMENT — Jim Menard retired 31 years to the day after he started his first seasonal gig with ADF&G.

Gone fishing: Jim Menard retires from ADF&G

By Megan Gannon

Jim Menard, the Norton Sound and Kotzebue area management biologist for the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, retired. He thought Wednesday, May 17, would be an appropriate day to say goodbye to the agency. He has an impressive recall of numbers and dates and said he started his first seasonal job for ADF&G on that day in 1982, in the Bristol Bay area.

"With the first job, I thought, man, this is pretty fun," Menard said last week in an interview with Nugget, reflecting on his 31-yearlong career. "You get to go camping, you're flying around in these Widgeons-planes that land on their belly on lakes. I thought that was the neatest thing."

He was enamored with the lifestyle of a seasonal worker. In the summers he got to live in a remote cabin with at least one other worker and count salmon or herring. He got his mail dropped to him in coffee cans from small planes and communicated with other technicians and mechanics by sideband radio. He also got to save up a lot of money. In the rest of the year, Menard said could either spend it on his tuition at University of Alaska Fairbanks or on travel to far-flung destinations like the pyramids and Easter Island. Then he'd come back the next summer flat broke and ready to do it all again. Eventually, the agency roped him into the office.

Menard became a fishery biologist in Bristol Bay in 1996. In 1998, he took the Kuskokwim assistant area biologist position, and then in 2001, he took a job as the Norton Sound area biologist job in Nome. He said some colleagues discouraged him from taking the job in Nome. At the time, Norton Sound had Alaska's only Tier II subsistence fishery, which restricted chum salmon fishing to those who score highest on a ranked permit application.

Menard took the job anyway. "I came in at a real low point," he said. The next few years were tough. In 2003, the Nome River was closed to all fishing for seven weeks. "You couldn't even put your fishing hook in the river," Menard said. "We projected we would not make escapement on chum or pink salmon, which ended up being true." The escapement goal for pinks was 13,000 and that year just 11,000 came in. Then the numbers started to turn around. Menard recalled taking a helicopter ride over the Sinuk River during the third week of June in 2004. He spotted big schools of pink salmon. "I was looking at those fish, and I was talking and then all of a sudden I said, whoa, I'm getting emotional here actually tears in my eyeswe have fish now." The pink run that year was estimated to be about one million.

Menard said he treasured the said. relationships he got to develop with people in the community, even when his job sometimes required him to give them citations or put them in the "penalty box" and let them off with a lecture. He said the landscape of Nome reminded him of where he grew up, in the subarctic environment of the Upper Peninsula of Michigan on Lake Superior. He especially liked going to the villages and meeting with Elders, though many have now passed on in the decades since Menard arrived in Nome.

For younger colleagues coming up through the agency, Menard said is advice is: You have to be comfortable talking to all different kinds of people-and to not always take their feedback personally.

"I've been cussed out on the phone, but, you know, it's that's part of the job," he said. "That's what you get paid for. You make a decision. Right or wrong, you have to make the call.'

Kevin Clark will succeed Menard as area manager.

Menard will remain in Nome, and he still has a son in school here, but he's getting the travel bug again this summer. He plans to cruise down the Mississippi from Memphis to New Orleans. He'll also visit family and friends, including a high school classmate who plans to take him ocean casting off the coast of North Caro-

"Now I'll be on the other side, nowing my fishing license," he
